Former Oakland Physician Is Honored.

Dr. Bayard T. Keller, formerly of Oakland, and Dr. A. C. Wright, of Akron, Ohio, were honor guests at a banquet given by the Akron and Summit County Medical Association at the City Club, Akron, Ohio, Tuesday night of this week, they being the two oldest practitioners in the association. Dr. Keller's home is at Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, going to that city from Oakland a great many years ago. He is remembered by many in Oakland as a kindly gentleman, conscientious in his work and always ready to answer the call to relieve suffering humanity.

HIS ILLUMINATED SUCCESS

By HERBERT L. McNARY

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

AS ALLAN TERRY wended his way toward the flashing lights of the Olympia he was greatly downcast in spirit. Allan Terry was a vaudeville actor, and on this Sunday night he was to play before an Olympia audience; and yet he was possessed of all the trepidation and self-consciousness of an amateur about to look across the footlights for the first time.

There was reason for an actor of his tried ability to feel blue. Tonight he was to have his tryout for "big time." If he was accepted it would mean a run in the biggest vaudeville houses in the country, and beyond that the "Follies," or a show on Broadway of his own. He was certain such possibilities existed because of his faith in his act; but that very knowledge of what his art required made him certain he would fail tonight. Twice before he had failed, and this would be his third and last trial.

The Olympia belonged to the "big time" circuit, but was in the suburb of a big city. On Sunday nights this theater contained an audience that was unconsciously a jury on ambitious recruits from the "sticks" and imported celebrities from Europe. And such an audience as it was; a cold and indifferent body who packed the Olympia because they had no place else to go on this evening, an audience of young fellows and girls who had to keep their "dates" and were more interested in each other than in the bill offered to them. This was the type of audience that meant certain death to Allan Terry's ambitions.

For his act consisted of clever characterizations, and it required the co-operation of the audience to recognize the characters drawn. Once recognized they would acclaim the remarkable genius of his ability. That was no idle boast. Four years in the "sticks" had proven that invariably, and human nature was the same the world over. But tonight he would not get co-operation; he would be on and off the stage before his audiences even attempted to recognize the subtle humor of his act. His only hope was that the audience might be strangely warm tonight or that preceding acts might wake them from their apathy.

What he really needed but could not provide was advance publicity—like that given Vernon Craigie, the English monologist, who was also on the bill tonight. The audience would be warmed to him by the floods of publicity already given. This was not favoritism, but rather business. Vernon Craigie meant a risky investment to the "big time" people, while Allan Terry was an experiment. If only he could have had Craigie's publicity.

He entered the stage door as the first act went on and took a position in the wings near the electrician. Allan Terry had always been interested in stage electrical effects and had devised some of his own and had manipulated lights on occasions.

Across in the opposite wing stood Mr. Courtney, the man who was to decide whether or not the acts had gone over; and as Terry read in this countenance a colder proposition than he even expected, his heart sank. Already luck had started to break against him. His only hope now was the audience.

He edged nearer to the electrician, who worked in shirt sleeves, so that he might better view the act on the stage. It was good—very good—but it wasn't going over. The act ended and the two performers came off the stage patently disappointed at the lack of applause; but their disappointment was nothing compared to that of Allan Terry's. This last factor, the audience, measured up to his worst expectations.

A lump formed in his throat as he visualized failure, just as he was on the turning point to success and fame. It wasn't fair; he had the ability—oh, for a bit of luck, a ray of sunshine!

He was aware that the electrician was staring at him peculiarly and forced a smile. "Must be wearing fur overcoats out there," he muttered, controlling his emotion with effort.

"Always cold on Sunday nights," answered the electrician as he turned to flash on the next number, for on each side of the stage were frames with the names of the performers listed and illuminated in the order of their appearance. The audience had programs, but such was their indifference that they preferred the simpler method of reading the flashed names.

Now the electrician turned back. "Your name's Terry?"

"Yes," answered Terry.

"You don't remember me," declared the electrician in low tones, "but I remember you. Ever since I came last I hoped I might meet you again and I thought you'd show up some night like this because yours is a big time act. Remember that night in Kokomo you took the lights and let the electrician go home because his little girl was dying? I was the electrician without any theatrics, but I went through h—l that night. You moved on and I didn't get a chance to thank you. Just writing wouldn't have done. I've just waited because I knew sometime I could pay you back."

Allan Terry was strangely moved. There in the darkness of the wings he could see the eyes of the shirt-sleeved electrician shining with emotion while a few feet away in a flood of light gayly danced a girl to the accompaniment of highly syncopated music.

"Is there something I can do to help you?" beseeched the electrician.

"Electricians have put over more than one act."

"I know that," agreed Terry, "but my act calls for no electrical effects. If I only had the benefit of publicity like Vernon Craigie received they would react differently towards me," he finished with a catch in his throat, deeply affected by abject despair.

By turning away he missed the transformation that suddenly came over the countenance of the electrician even as his busy fingers worked with switches, for the lights over which he had control flashed no brighter than his own eyes.

Terry returned to the wings near the conclusion of the act preceding his, and placed his stand of wigs and makeup at the entrance. The act ended and from the small amount of applause delivered he guessed the audience to be colder than ever. He picked up his stand to go out on the stage just as the electrician laid a detaining hand upon him.

"Just a moment," he said with voice tingling, "sometimes a little suspense helps."

Allan Terry hesitated and heard rising from the house a slight rustling. He wondered at it and welcomed it, rejoicing in any disturbance that might rouse the audience from the coldness of indifference. He looked questioningly at the electrician, but the latter looked away self-consciously.

"Go ahead and good luck," murmured the electrician.

Allan Terry stepped out onto the stage—and was greeted by a storm of applause! He was so overcome by the unexpectedness of it that he was forced to busy himself in confusion with his makeup stand. Glancing up he saw the electrician in the wings smiling exultingly. Allan Terry wondered, and then the actor of him realized his opportunity. He was given a friendly audience—no matter how the explanation—it was up to him to hold it.

He threw himself into his act and the aroused audience, eager to understand, became like the audiences of the "sticks," the audience he needed. It became even more receptive as he rose to heights of genius and acted as he never had before, for, with that telepathy that seems to exist between actor and audience, they seemed to sense that something beyond the act was occurring.

Allan Terry lost track of his curtain calls, but he was gloriously happy even before the blase judge so far forgot himself as to run around back of the stage to congratulate him.

Allan Terry was a success. The following act had nearly finished before he could fully realize the fact. Then came the turn of widely billed Vernon Craigie. He, too, waited for the effect of suspense; and Allan Terry heard again the sound of people hurriedly conferring with programs and again he was puzzled. He turned with a frown of wonderment to the electrician only to find him in turn looking at him with wide-eyed emotion.

"You're wondering why the audience is looking at their programs," said the electrician. "Well, it's because I took a long chance to put you over and it went through."

"You helped me?" slowly repeated the perplexed actor. "You mean you were responsible for that audience being so receptive to me—how?"

The electrician pointed out to the stage to where were the frames now bearing the illuminated sign of "Vernon Craigie."

"That's the second time I flashed that name. I flashed Craigie's for you because you said you could go over if you only had the benefit of his publicity—I hope it worked."

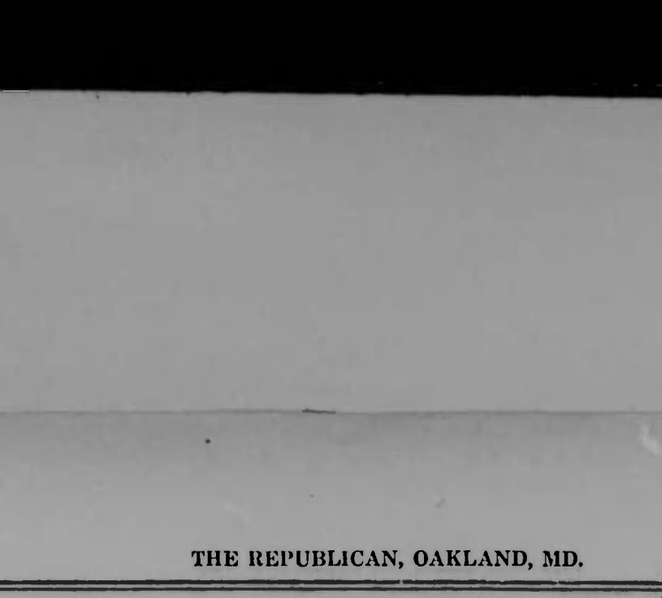
"Worked—worked!" repeated Terry, choking with gratefulness. "Why, man, you put me over!"

"I'm glad," said the electrician simply.

Coming Events Shown by the Finger Nails

Marks near the cut end of the nails mean that something will happen before the week is out. In the middle of the nail, perhaps a year will pass by before the event occurs. When the mark is toward the bottom of the nail, the time elapsing before the happening is greater, and a mark just appearing under the flesh indicates a surprise.

White marks in general mean happiness or good fortune. One on the thumb means distinction of some sort, success in the undertaking you most wish to succeed. On the first finger, too, the white marks indicate success, in general.



The middle finger means, on the right hand, that some wish will come true, and on the left hand that something very pleasant and unexpected is to come to pass. The ring finger means, if it is white-specked, marriage, and happy marriage. The little finger means money, more if the white mark appears on the right hand than if it appears on the left.—Exchange.

Self Revealed

W. S. Gilbert of Gilbert and Sullivan fame always insisted on attractive young women being asked to his home. His wife mentioning that fact to Pett Ridge, the novelist, added that she felt there was cause for jealousy.

"I have explained it before to Mrs. Gilbert," said W. S. turning to Pett Ridge, "but I may as well explain it to you. I'm too good to be true."—W. Orton Tewson in New York Evening Post.

SCHOOL DAYS

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

KING OF THE CLOUDS

"HELLO," said the King of the Clouds to Mr. Wind.

"Hello," said Mr. Wind, and he whistled a great long whistle. Then he blew and he shouted:

"I'm Mr. Wind and I'm wild today,
I'm full of pranks, I'm full of play,
I don't care what the people say,
I am going to have a time so gay."

"It has been warm lately," said the King of the Clouds, "and people have seen how things have grown. People who have been in cities all through the week and who have gone out on Saturdays and Sundays have said as they have looked at the flowers and the shrubs and the trees and the leaves, 'Oh, how they have grown.'

'It Has Been Warm Lately," Said the King of the Clouds.

"Yes, they have spoken of the flowers just as though they were children, for you know how people will say to children, 'How you have grown.'

"And the people have even said to the flowers, 'Why, last week you were nothing but a little bud, and here you are all out.'

"In just the very same way that people will say to a child, 'Why, my dear, you seemed only a baby so short a time ago, and here you are grown up almost.'"

The Wind kept blowing and blowing and pretty soon the King of the Clouds spoke again.

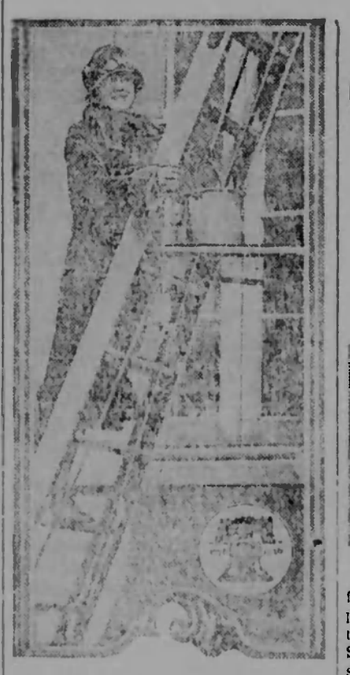
"Mr. Wind, wouldn't you like me to join you? The people are all saying that it is looking 'overcast' and as though it might rain. And here I am all ready for a good frolic. I am eager for fun."

"Join me, join me by all means," said Mr. Wind.

So the King of the Clouds joined Mr. Wind and Mr. Wind blew and the King of the Clouds called forth all the Army of Raindrops and what a time they had.

They chased over the pavements and the roads and the sidewalks—Mr. Wind after them! They ran races. They had so beautiful a time.

"Well, well," laughed the King of the Clouds. "I did hear such a funny thing just now. Someone opened a window and poked her head out for a second and then she said, 'Oh, mercy, it is raining to beat the band!



"Now that is a joke! I may beat down upon pavements and the roads and the sidewalks but I don't beat the band. I wouldn't know how to to play an instrument and so make music. Fancy the King of the Clouds playing a saxophone or a cornet! What funny expressions people use."

And then the King of the Clouds and Mr. Wind raced and chased even more and oh, such a wind and rain storm as it was.

The people who were indoors shook their heads and said, "Impossible to go out on a day like this." And the ones who were already out-of-doors got soaked—drenched right through all their clothes.

A FAIR COLORIST

This young woman ascends a giddy ladder every day to put finishing touches to the "Rainbow City"—the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, opening in Philadelphia June 1 and continuing until December 1, to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence. She is one of an army of young artists who are making the Sesqui a colorful success.

PRONUNCIATION AID

Jean Webster, descendant of the famous lexicographer, Noah Webster, presents a copy of her ancestor's work to the Publicity Department of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition Association to help them in pronouncing properly the name of the big events which opens June 1 to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. There are many types of pronunciations heard but there is just one proper way North says. It is "Ses-Kwuh-ten-ten'-nial" with the accent on the first syllable of the "sesqui" and on the second syllable of the "centennial."

THE RAISE WAS SMALL

By DOUGLAS MACK

(©, 1926, Western Newspaper Union.)

MALCOM LEE bent slightly over the desk of the girl, just slightly, for the young man was thoroughly disgusted, and cared little who heard what lay upon his tongue.

"Jennie, I only got a five-dollar raise."

Jennie Mowery looked up from her work. She was pretty but one would be more liable to note that she looked sensible. "That's better than nothing, I think."

"Yes," he retorted. "A little over a dollar a week better."

"You probably fared as well as anyone," she persisted.

"I've tried in vain to find out," he admitted. "Say, Jennie, how much did you get?"

"That would be telling," she evaded.

"I was slighted for some reason. I believe Brightley is to blame."

"He's watching you now," the girl warned.

Lee tossed his head belligerently, but he bent lower. "If it wasn't for our dream, little girl, I wouldn't care a snap. I'd make a speech and tell 'em where I stand. But it would seem a shame to waste my six years with the General company if there is a possibility of bigger money eventually."

"Well, you know the reputation Mr. Collins has for picking his right bowers from the ranks.'

"I've heard about it. But how many openings are there to be filled? Not many. It wouldn't be so bad if the wages were so a fellow could bank a little occasionally. What I've got saved will hardly buy that ring I've chosen."

Visible affection for this youth swept into the girl's eyes. "Your wages are not so bad," she soothed. "And you remember I asked you not to buy that higher-priced roadster. You would be quite wealthy if you'd taken the cheaper one."

He flushed. "I got it for you, and your mother. Other fellows nowadays have cars, a lot of them finer than what I've got. I couldn't bear to take my future wife and her mother riding in a tin can."

Jennie nudged him—too late.

Lee obeyed. He felt that Brightley harbored a grudge against him, and recently the attitude appeared more pronounced. "Old-fashioned," he thought, "like Old Collins."

In his first four years with the General company Lee had had four salary increases. The first was eight dollars per month, the others, ten each. Since, two paltry lives. Fresh from a small town, he had firmly expected to crash through to the top. He was capable, adapting himself readily to any task. Freely he put in overtime. That was in the battle, he reasoned. In fact, it was not reasoning, but a spontaneous desire to succeed that prompted. But the first five-dollar increase streaked ambition with cold calculation.

Jennie and he were engaged. But they put off the date for a day when Lee's income would sufficiently provide for them, and Jennie's invalid mother as well.

"My wife won't be allowed to do anything more than keep house," he would argue.

That night at Mrs. Mowery's house Malcom brought the subject up anew.

"Sometimes, when Brightley is grouchiest, I feel moved to resign on the spot. I nearly did so today. I'm sure I can find another position."

"You doubtless could, with your line," Jennie soothed. "But the chances are you'd have to do the six years all over."

"I'm afraid so, Malcom," the mother put in gently.

"You're a pair of wonderful girls," he stated, "but I'm not so sure you're right in this matter. However, let's take a joyride and forget."

"Gasoline and tires cost money," said Jennie. Within she was a pulsing torment. The man she loved, and wanted to marry, was a spendthrift. He was becoming worse, too. Unless his income grew much larger their wedded life would be a daily grind. She recalled the ancient adage. Yet she tried to smile.

"But I got a raise today," Malcom mocked. "Enough to take our rickety old wagon a whole mile. Come on"—he was impatient.

Jennie smothered an impulse to cry out. . . . to suggest what his extravagance was leading to—to tell him she didn't dare marry him until he came to realize the value of money. But she couldn't, because it always angered him—and, too, she loved him.

"Get your things on, Momsey," she managed. Then she struck up a lively air upon their ancient organ.

"Holy gee, you should have a piano," Lee murmured. "Those fingers—"

"Are just like other girls'," she supplemented. Beneath her raillery lurked fear—fear of what her practical mind visioned too clearly.

The next morning, when the manager came to Malcom Lee's desk the young chap mentioned the subject foremost in his thoughts.

"Mr. Brightley, why did I get a five-dollar raise?"

"I'm sorry," was the veiled response. It stung Lee to the core. Unknowing, almost, he got to his feet. "I don't believe it." The shrill words cut the atmosphere like a knife-thrust. Everyone heard, stopped to stare, and Jennie Mowery bit her lip.

"You mean you question the sincerity of my statement?" the manager asked distinctly, his face very pale.

Something urged Malcom to apologize, but he fought it off. He would go through with the matter regardless of consequences.

"You're holding me back with this concern because you don't like me. I'm surely more valuable than I used to be, yet my increases grow smaller. And you are to blame! That's where I stand!" He glared. He saw Jennie's face for an instant, white as snow.

"I repeat, Lee, I'm sorry. You can get your money at the desk."

"My money," Lee blurted, "including the magnificent raise recently granted. All right, but first," a fiery light whipped into his gaze, "I'm going to see Mr. Collins!"

He darted past the manager's figure and almost slammed through the door of the owner's sanctum. But he calmed at sight of the executive's graying hair. This man always commanded respect.

"Excuse my unusual entry, Mr. Collins, but I've been discharged from a job that I've spent six years on."

"What is it?" the old man queried interestedly.

"Because Mr. Brightley developed a dislike for me I felt I was being held back. My last salary increase verities by contention."

Collins addressed him deliberately. "On the contrary, he argued that you should have the biggest tilt to date."

That whirred crazily in the listener's ears. Then. . . . the owner himself was responsible. Lee began to stiffen again.

"Young man," the owner abruptly said, "have you ever paused to figure that a salary income is the same as that from a business? You've worked on the books. When our marketing conditions do not meet expectations we do the next best. . . . economize, slash expense. A salaried man must do the same."

"Bah!" Lee leaped up to start for the door.

"Just a moment, please." The voice was fatherly. "I fear you have not realized the real import of my words."

"I don't want to," Malcom snapped, his hand upon the knob.

"Some day, when you've spent all you have made, and you have a wife and kiddies to make happy, you will."

Jennie! When he must make her happy. The unimportance of the small increase showed clearly in contrast to his bigger task in life. So many times she had spoken of economy, and he had brutally displayed peevishness. And now. . . .

In the stillness of that office, and under the steady stare of an old man, Malcom Lee found the light. He'd have to start over. But he could do so with a clean slate—a new vision. He wheeled.

"Please say you forgive me, Mr. Collins."

"You may go," the other replied kindly.

Outside, Lee raced to Mr. Brightley, and confessed, voice loud and clear. "I'm very, very sorry. I apologize, and beg you to accept."

Brightley's hand shot out for friendly clasp. Cheers rang through the room, for this was drama, and ordinary approval would not suffice. Jennie Mowery's hands were clenched tightly.

Lee broke away in confusion. He plunged to Jennie's desk. "See you tonight," he managed, and started away.

It was Mr. Collins' deep voice that halted his progress.

"Mr. Brightley, can the General company afford to lose a man who is big enough to take his medicine when he finds he is wrong?"

"I should say we can't" cried the manager with cordial pleasure. Then his voice swung to its usual capacity. "Get back to those statements, Mr. Lee."

Fertile Land Overrun by Worthless Cactus

Within a few short years, Queensland, Australia, has become practically overrun with cactus just because some settler or traveler brought in a few sprigs of the plant known as the prickly pear, writes Samuel G. Blythe in the Saturday Evening Post. At first no one paid any attention to it. Rum-looking thing it was, quite a novelty in its way, said the residents. None of it ever seen in Australia before.

But while the natives passed it off as of little consequence, the sprigs got their toes into the friendly soil of the tropical country and started to spread. After a while the Queensland farmers took notice. The cactus was encroaching on the grazing land and the plow land. It was encroaching by leaps and bounds, by acres and acres, by miles and miles. They tried to contine it and to exterminate it, but they might as well have tried to dip up the Pacific ocean.

Queensland is a large state. It has 670,000 square miles of territory, and most of those miles are covered by the pest, with arable land being eaten up by it.

CLIMATE IN MARYLAND IS EQUABLE, SAYS NUNN

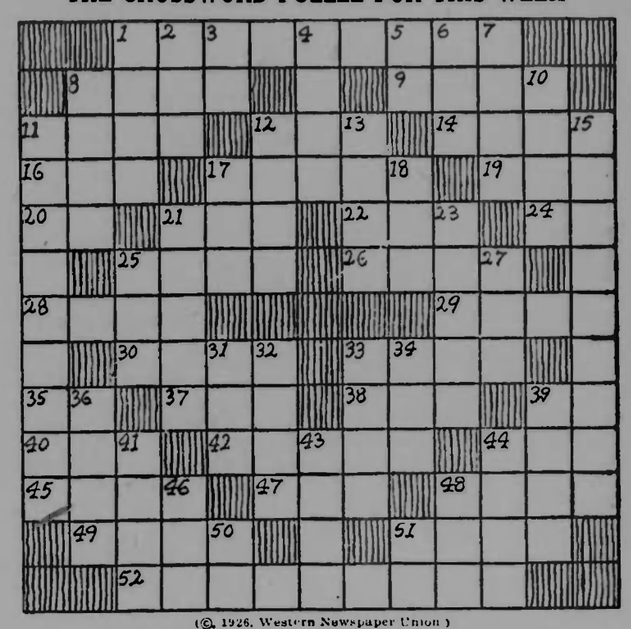
Seasonal Changes Are Well Marked, With Few Severe Storms, Publication Says

Maryland's climate, when considered "all-the-year-round," is one of the best in the United States, according to the third edition of "Our Climate," an informative little booklet prepared by Roscoe Nunn, meteorologist at Baltimore. According to Mr. Nunn's publication, which is just off the presses. Maryland winters are mild, although not lacking in invigorating qualities. Zero weather has been recorded at Baltimore only 13 times in 55 years, and the lowest record during this 55 year period was 7 degrees below zero. During the last 25 years "zero" weather was recorded only 5 times at Cambridge, 10 times at Easton, 13 times at Princess Anne, 20 times at Cheltenham, 34 times at Laurel and 37 times at Frederick.

The seasonal changes are well marked.

Summers are warm, as in other good agricultural sections of the United States. They are, however, unusually tempered by cool spells that originate in more northern latitudes, frequently in the Hudson Bay region of Canada. Spring and autumn are both delightful seasons.

The geographic position of Maryland and Delaware with reference to the usual storm paths is decidedly favorable for a uniform and abundant supply of moisture for all purposes. The annual precipitation averages 41.25 inches in Maryland, and 42.85 inches in Delaware, and its distribution throughout the year is almost ideal.



The average annual snowfall is moderate, amounting to about 28 inches, unmelted in Maryland and Delaware. Snow does not remain long on the ground, as a rule.

The sun shines at Baltimore during some portion of the day on about 321 days in the year, on the average. "Winter Sunshine" is nearly double the amount which occurs over a large portion of the Lower Lake region. Yet days with 100 per cent of sunshine are rather rare at any season of the year and a typical day is one on which the sky is partly covered with clouds.

The atmosphere here is comparatively free from smoke and dust. Baltimore enjoys a cleaner atmosphere than the cities of the West and South where soft coal is used. This is no small advantage.

The "growing season," or frost-free period, for the eastern half of Maryland and of Delaware is remarkably long for the latitude in which Maryland and Delaware are located, averaging about 195 days.

Causes of Death in Maryland

Organic heart disease in the white population and tuberculosis in the colored outranked all other causes of death in the counties of Maryland during the last three years, according to recent reports from the State Department of Health.

Lists prepared by Dr. F. V. Beitles, Chief of the State Bureau of Vital Statistics, showing the twenty principal causes of death, each year, for the last three years, indicate interesting differences in the susceptibility of white and colored, to various diseases.

In the white population, heart disease led the list all three years, with over a thousand deaths each year, and was the cause of one death out of every seven. Bright's disease, which came second, was responsible for one death out of every ten, with a total of over 725 deaths each year. Cerebral hemorrhage, with 675 deaths in 1923. 683 in 1924, and 727 in 1925, had the third place. Cancer, with 562 deaths in 1923, 495 in 1924, and 606 in 1925, and tuberculosis with 523 deaths in 1923, 500 in 1924, and 517 in 1925, held fourth and fifth places.

In the colored population, tuberculosis, with 285 deaths in 1923, 319 in 1924, and 312 in 1925, caused one out of every nine deaths in 1923 and one out of every eight in 1925, and had the first place on the list. Organic heart disease came second, with over 250 deaths each year, and was responsible for one death out of every ten. Cerebral hemorrhage had the fifth place in 1923, the fourth in 1924 and the third in 1925. Chronic Bright's disease was third in the list in 1923 and 1924 and fourth in 1925. Diarrhoea and enteritis among children under two years old had the fourth place in 1923 and the fifth in 1924 and 1925.

Cancer, the fourth in the list of white deaths, was tenth in the causes of colored deaths. Diabetes was fourteenth in the white population, but was not listed as a principal cause of death among the colored. Whooping cough was ninth on the colored list in 1923 and fourteenth in 1924 and 1925, but did not appear as one of the twenty principal causes of death in the white population. The pneumonias, broncho and lobar, were more fatal among the colored than the white population, but they figured important factors in the total deaths in both races. On the other hand, there was a larger percentage of deaths from accidents in the total white deaths than in the colored. Deaths from accidents occupied the sixth place in the total white deaths, causing one out of every nineteen in 1925. In the list of colored deaths they occupied tenth place in 1923, the seventh in 1924 and the ninth in 1925, when they caused one out of every twenty-six deaths.

THE ROCK.

Elijah, boldest and most zealous of all the great Hebrew prophets—a man so great in his day and generation that the sacred writers aver God spared him the grave and sent down a chariot which carried him up to heaven—was now and then a pessimist.

And we of today who are not prophets but humble wafarers on life's journey are bound in an agitated age like this to have our clouded days—perhaps even clouded weeks and months—when, if we lean upon our own knowledge or our darkened reason, we shall be disconsolate.

Even though we are able to tell ourselves that God reigns and that His truth, His loving mercy, His righteousness, must prevail to the end, the strife still filling the world is too much for our habitual optimism. The cheerful assurances of our friends that all this hatred, this pushing aside humanity for the methods of the jungle, is working for good, leaves us cold.

The "philosophy of chirp", as optimism in a troubled era has been called, may even give our somber mood offense. If so, let us recall how even the mighty servant of God who three thousand years ago came out of Tishbe on the borders of the desert was wont to become fretful. How he did chide Israel! How impatient he became—impatient no less with the patience of God than with the waywardness of men! But how submissive to the wisdom greater than man's wisdom in the end!

At the moment when we seek him for the purpose of today's study he has just overcome the prophets of Baal, and for the destruction he has wreaked upon them has been warned by Queen Jezebel that she means to have his life by the next day. Driven to flee, he goes into the wilderness, and thence to a cave in the mountains of Horeb. The reader should turn to I Kings, xix 9-18, for the story.

There are two striking lessons in that wonderful passage. The first is the familiar one in regard to the manifestation of the Lord. He was not in the whirlwind, he was not in the fire, he was not in the earthquake, or any of the other mighty phenomena, but in the still small voice. The thunder and whirlwind of popular clamors and tumults, the pomp and splendor of worldly power, are often mistaken for Him, but it is now as ever in the still small voice heard by His lowliest servant that He is found.

The lesson is contained in the last of the verses referred to: "I, and I alone now serve Thee, oh God, in all Israel," was Elijah's cry.

"You are not alone, but I have even seven thousand faithful servants in Israel who have not bowed the knee to Baal or kissed his lips," is the Lord's reply.

There were seven thousand devout, God-fearing, God-loving souls in Israel whom Elijah knew nothing about!

There had been just seven thousand times as much progress in the establishment of the kingdom of heaven as Elijah had supposed.

There was just seven thousand times as much reason for faith and for optimism as he perceived!

Is there seven thousand times as much reason for faith and optimism now as the despairing Elijahs of our own day reeken?

The Thirty Years' War caused a destruction of life and property compared with which the destruction in the World War was moderate; yet how enormously the world has progressed since the former war ended in 1648!

And the frivolity witnessed after the Napoleonic wars seized even the congress of rulers which assembled at Vienna to formulate the peace and which beeame known to history as the dancing eongress. No indecency of that sort followed the war whose aftermath is distracting the world today.

All ages are ages of terrible struggle between good and evil, but evil has never yet been, and never will be, triumphant. God in on His throne and His kingdom ever drawns more near.

A man was sent out on a rocky promontory in Scotland where his signals might help a ship working its way through a difficult channel in a great storm. Great waves heat upon the promontory and their spray wet the flagman to the skin, but he stood his dangerous ground and signaled the ship in. After she was in someone asked him if he did not tremble as he stood out here. He answered: "My legs trembled, but the rock didn't tremble. I never knew before how solid that rock was."

It is always so. It is the storm that reveals the solidity of the rock. This was the lesson that Elijah needed to learn. The salvation of the world rests on the Rock of Ages, and is secure.

CONSOLIDATION PROGRESS.

One hundred and four one-room schools were eliminated through consolidation or other agencies in the State of Washington during the year ending June 30, 1925, according to a report from the State Department of Education in that State, and only 8 per cent of the elementary school children were taught in one-room schools. Pacific county, which maintained 7 one-teacher schools enrolling 128 pupils, had the smallest number of such schools in Washington that year.

Recently the board of education of Montgomery county, Alabama, reported to the United States Bureau of Education that their last one-teacher school had been closed. There are at least two other States, Utah and Ohio, in which some counties have succeeded in providing grade school advantages to all rural pupils.

Hope.

Ignorance, secrecy and fear were pointed out at the cancer meeting held in Baltimore recently, under the joint auspices of the medical societies and the State Federation of Women's Clubs as the greatest stumbling blocks in the way of help for the victim of cancer.

It was shown that twenty-five years ago from one-half to nine-tenths of all cancer cases ended hopelessly. During the last five years, the number of hopeless cases has been reduced to four-tenths, or even less than that, of the cancer patients. The improvement was first noted about 1920, when results began to be seen of the better understanding on the part of both medical and lay people, of the vital importance of early recognition and prompt treatment of the cancerous condition It was agreed that the possibility of greater improvement depends largely upon the more general realization that early recognition offers a hopeful outcome while delay will in all probability be fatal.

Cancer is almost one and a-half times more prevalent in the white population of Maryland, in proportion to the total population of both races, than in the colored, according to records of the Bureau of Vital Statistics of the State Department of Health. Moreover, the figures show that in the white population, cancer is responsible for more deaths than even tuberculosis. In 1925, cancer had the fourth place in the causes of death in the white population, and tenth in the colored. During the year, out of a total of 16,140 deaths from all causes in the white population, there were 1435 deaths from cancer; 606 in the counties and 829 in Baltimore City. In the colored population, out of a total of 5,503 deaths there were 188 from cancer; 82 in the counties and 106 in Baltimore City.

"It is impossible to overemphasize the importance of the early recognition of cancer," Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health said, in commenting on these figures. "While the actual cause of cancer is not known, research workers have found that the cancerous condition begins with a single local growth. If immediate attention is given—and a well trained doctor or surgeon is the one to decide what that treatment must be—there is hope for a successful outcome. No help can be gotten from quacks or from patent medicines. Any suspicious growth or unfavorable condition of the skin or of any part of the body should be immediately brought to the attention of your doctor. That way lies hope.

M'KINLEY AND PROTECTION

It was just a quarter of a century ago last month that Willliam McKinley was assassinated in Buffalo, N. Y. So engrossed has it been in current topics that the American press has almost entirely failed to give notice to the passing of that great protectionist, who defined the American tariff system sponsored by his party then and now as a tariff levied upon foreign imports "so adjusted as to secure the necessary revenue, and which imposes the duty necesary on the foreign competing product, making it bear the burden of duty, and, as far as possible, luxuries only excepted, permits the non-competing foreign product to come in free of duty. It says to our foreign competitor, if you want to bring your merchandise here, your farm products here, your coal and iron ore, your wool, your salt, your pottery, your glass, your cotton and woolens, and sell them alongside of our producers in our markets, we will make your product bear duty—and, in this way in effect to pay for the privilege of doing it."

The operation of the Republican protective tariff is such as to make the competing foreign article bear the burden, draw the load, supply the revenue; and in performing this essential office it encourages at the same time our own industries and protects our own people in their chosen employments. That is the purpose and the effect of the protective tariff, championed by the Republicans and opposed by the Democrats. In it there is no denial of equal opportunity to any, no granting of special privilege to any, save, perhaps, a special privilege to the American producer against the ruinous competition which, in the absence of tariff protection, would be offered by the peasant labor of the Old World.

GARRETT COUNTY YOUTH KILLS HIMSELF IN BARN

Marshall Wiland, 20, Gave No Intimation That He Planned to Take His Own Life.

With not the slighest intimation to the surviving members of the household that he contemplated taking his own life, Marshall Wiland, aged 20 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Wiland, of near New Germany, in Election District 8, near Grantsville, the younth secured an old revolver at the home and taking it to the barn on his father's farm last Friday afternoon, shot himself just below the heart and died a few minutes later as his mother held his head in her lap.

The young man had returned to the home of his parents with whom he lived, after a trip to a near-by mine with the farm team to get some coal for domestic purposes. The mine was not working at the time and he returned with an empty conveyance.

Upon entering the house he sat by a stove in the building for about ten minutes and then left the house for the barn, having previously secured the revolver from an adjacent room. In a few minutes two reports were heard by members of the household. His father and mother and other members of the family ran to the barn and found the youth in the haymow dying from the self-inflicted wound just below his heart.

It is thought that the first shot was fired to ascertain if the firearm was in working order, as one bullet only had struck him. Young Wiland was dead before he could be removed to the house.

Dr. N. R. Davis, of Grantsville, was immediately summoned by Mr. Wiland, who upon examination of the body gave it as his opinion that unconsciousness came almost instantaneously followng the firing of the fatal charge. After grazing the heart the bullet lodged in the spinal column of the young man.

No reason is known and none could be given by relatives or friends of the victim for the suicide. His health had been good and he was not melancholy in any way. The funeral was held on Sunday with burial in the Methodist cemetery at New Germany.

Following the report of the death of young Wiland Justice of the Peace George M. Brown, acting as coroner, summoned a jury of inquest and a verdict was rendered that death was due to a self-inflicted wound.

Surviving, besides his parents, are six brothers and a sister, the latter being Mrs. Alpha Beeman, residing near Lonaconing. The brothers are Ervin, Earle, Roy and Elwood, of New Germany, and Henry and George Wiland, who live in Ohio.

Marshall was next to the youngest in the family. He worked with his father on the farm and was of a very genial, friendly nature. The Wiland home is located about six miles south of the National Highway.

Oakland Gun Club and the Garrett County Sportsmen's Association Address a Letter to Swepson Earle, One of the Commissioners of the Conservation Department of Maryland, In Which The Garrett Countians Register a Protest Against the Action of the Commission Closing Deep Creek Lake To Gunners, While at the Same Time Susquehannah Flats, Where More Ducks Are Killed In a Day Than in Garrett County in Five Years, Is Left Open to the Sportsmen of Baltimore and Lower Maryland.

Under date of October 21, 1926, the Oakland Gun Club and the Garrett County Sportsmen's Association addressed the following letter to Mr. Swepson Earle, one of the Commissioners of the Conservation Department of Maryland, and also sent a copy to the Baltimore Sun for publication. The Sun thus far has failed to publish the letter and no acknowledgement of its receipt has been sent by Mr. Earle. The letter is published in The Republican to show the unfairness of the commission in closing the waters of Garrett county and at the same time permit gunners in other and more favored section of the State the privilege of shooting the migratory fowl promiscuously:

Mr. Swepson Earle, Commissioner,
Conservation Department of Maryland,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear Sir:—Your letter of September 16th addressed to Mr. E. Lee LeCompte, State Game Warden, a copy of which appeared in a recent issue of our local papers, in regard to the shooting of ducks on Deep Creek Lake, has been brought to the attention of our association.

The members of the Oakland Gun Club and the Garrett County Sportsmen's Association wish to register a protest against your ruling that ducks shall not be shot on this lake.

You give as your reason that it will be impossible to enforce protection of fish and protect the lake for the State if people are permitted to shoot wildfowl. Will you please advise how the shooting of wildfowl in the late fall will interfere with the propagation of fish? You further state that the ducks should have a resting place on their passage to and from the State. Why not a resting place on the Susquehannah flats where more ducks are killed in one day than in Garrett county in five years. The number of ducks that visit Garrett county are comparatively few and the hunters feel that they shouldd not be deprived of an occasional shot at one. It is impossible for all of us to visit the Susquehannah Flats.

The State is rapidly taking over all of the good hunting ground in Garrett county. Many thousands of acres are now closed to hunters now in addition to that about seventy miles of shore line along the lake is to be closed, and what is the result? The wildcat, weasel and other game destroying animals are multiplying on the game preserves and feasting on the game that is there for protection. If the game is to be protected, we must have the co-operation of the hunters. By curtailing their privileges this co-operation will be lacking and in a few years at the most, game in Garrett county will be practically extinct.

Speaking of fish protection in Deep Creek Lake, why is it that thousands of fish are being allowed to go thru the tunnel leading from the lake to the power house, where they are killed by the turbines? Why is it that the power company has not been compelled to place a screen at the entrance to the tunnel in order to prevent this wholesale slaughter of the fish? This screen would do more for the protection of the fish than the prohibiting of hunters taking an occasional shot at ducks which happen to alight on the waters of the lake.

Yours very truly,
OAKLAND GUN CLUB,
GARRETT CO. SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION.

Shooting May Be Permitted in Two Years.

The publicity given the above communication and in reply to the letter addressed to Mr. Earle, State Conservation Commissioner, a reply was made by Mr. Earle to the Oakland organization on last Saturday. In his statement Mr. Earle said "Deep Creek Lake is an artificial body of water formed two years ago when the Youghiogheny Hydro-Electric Corporation constructed a dam at this point. The company owns the land surrounding the lake to a distance of 25 feet above the water line. Therefore it has the right to prohibit hunters on the lake, but instead has turned it over to the Conservation Department for regulations."

WARNING TO AUTOISTS TO BEWARE OF FOGS

This Is The Season in Western Maryland When Caution in Driving Is Real Necessity

With the arrival of the season in which tourists are likely to encounter fogs in many sections of the State, the Maryland Automobile Club, Cumberland Branch, has issued a statement urging all car drivers to be particularly careful when encountering this dangerous driving condition.

"The season of the year has come when fog is encountered almost nightly," says the director of the branch. "Some drivers make the mistake of using only their dim lights. They cannot see any better with dimmers and they increase the risk of head-on collisions. For their own safety, and the safety of others, they should use their headlamps. To tie white handkerchiefs over headlights increase the visibility somewhat; to use orange colored cloths is even better. This precaution stops all direct unreflected light which otherwise would illuminate the particles clouding the atmosphere, and reflect back into the eyes of the driver. No device, however, is a complete success against fog. Only thoughtless or ignorant drivers attempt to drive rapidly through fog. Caution is the only real accident preventative."

STATE DAIRY PRODUCT SPECIAL TO COME MONDAY

Train Bearing Finest Breeds of Milk Producing Animals with Lecturers To Arrive Early

Some folks say that success is due to luck, while others claim it is due to hard work and perseverence. The truth of this statement is not to be argued at this time, but surely the farmer who is successful in taking home with him a purbred heifer from the Dairy Products Special next Monday morning is surely lucky. The giving away of this heifer is actually going to happen and some farmer is going to have one more good wellbred heifer of his own choice on his farm.

The business men of Oakland are responsible for the gift heifer. They have appropriated enough money to buy an animal that anyone can be proud to claim.

The awarding of the heifer is not the only feature of interest to the farmer who visits town that day, nor is it the only interesting thing for the townspeople. There are many others. The lectures on dairy breeding, by dairy authorities and cow demonstrations by representatives of the National Dairy Breeders Association, are well worth the time spent in the town and at the train, which will be sidetracked in the railway yard here. Then, too, the exhibit and sale of purebred dairy bulls from high producing dams cannot be surpassed.

The younger folks will also appreciate this affair, because they will see a dairy product exhibit which will always be remembered.

The high school students and others will be entertained at the high school auditorium at ten o'clock when Professor "Happy" Goldsmith will deliver his famous lecture, "Yes, We Are Cowllegiate."

At the hour of 9:50 o'clock in the morning at the Garrett County Circuit Court Chamber in the Court House in Oakland, Miss Elsie Stark will give an instructive talk to the women of the county on "Proper Foods for Health."

The entire morning will be full of interesting and instructive lectures, demonstrations and exhibits which every member of every family in the town and county should not fail to see and hear.

Monday morning, November 15th, from 8:00 until 11:30 o'clock at the Baltimore and Ohio station, the Garrett County Court House and the auditorium of the Oakland High School will be the high spots.

The following named residents and business men have contributed to the fund to be used in the purchase of the animal to be given some farmer or dairyman following the visit of the special train to Oakland: Bittner & Stahl, Bolden Undertaking Co., C. D. Bosley, Brown's Store, Coffman-Fisher Co., C. A. Deffinbaugh, D. M. Dixon & Son, E. S. Evans, J. Fazzalari, First National Bank, Farmers Bank, G. A. Fraley & Sons, Garrett National Bank, F. E. Oakland today is celebrating the eighth anniversary of the signing of the Armistice which brought to an end hostilities which had been engaging the nations of the earth for four years preceding. Oakland's first Armistice Day will be remembered by those of her citizens who engaged in that never to be forgotten parade when with drums beating and church bells ringing men and women cheering as they marched, covered all the streets of the town and counted the day well spent even with hundreds of things left undone in order to join in upon that gala occasion. Today at the same hour —11:00—the bells of all the churches will again ring but the enthusiasm shown eight years ago will likely be lacking.

DIED.

MISS ADA CECELIA FAHEY

The announcement of the death of Miss Ada Cecelia Fahey, which occurred at her home a few miles south of Oakland Tuesday morning at 1:00 o'clock, came as a distinct shock to her many friends in Oakland and the country roundabout. She was 28 years and 6 months old, being a daughter of the late John Fahey and Mrs. Ellen Fahey. She was born in Grafton, West Va., but came to Garrett county with her parents as a child where she grew to womanhood and was educated. J. An only brother, the late Edward Fahey, died at Grafton, about three months ago. The remains of the deceased young lady were taken to Grafton, West Va., on train No. 3 this morning and the funeral services will follow in the Catholic church of that town upon arrival there today.

THREE ROUTES FOR ROAD PIEDMONT TO OAKLAND

Mineral County Residents Interested In Short Cut to Mountain Top From The East

Mineral county residents, especially those residing in Piedmont and their neighbors of Westernport and Luke, in Allegany county, Md., are greatly interested in the construction of a short-cut from the foot of the mountain to Oakland instead of having to motor through the George's Creek Valley to Frostburg on the National Highway and thence via Grantsville and Keyser's Ridge to Oakland, when a much shorter route may be obtained by following either one of three proposed routes as described in a recent issue of the Piedmont Herald, the article in question being reproduced in The Republican today. The Herald's article follows:

Three different routes are proposed for the hard surfaced road, which is sought between Piedmont and Oakland, according to C. S. Friend, of this place, who is thoroughly familiar with the territory in Garrett county, thru which the road would pass.

To see the problem clearly, we must keep in mind that a state road is now under construction from Oakland to Kitzmiller and that leaving this road at Altamont another hard surfaced road will pass thru Swanton, North Glade and Bittinger and join the National Pike at Grantsville, says Mr. Friend. The problem, as he sees it, is to decide upon a route that will connect the Tri-Towns with one of these roads and give us a short, low grade route West. As a means of reaching a fair decision on the three routes, he suggests, that the Commissioners of Garrett county have the state engineers go over all three routes and select the best one.

Route No. 1 runs from Bloomington to where the Kitzmiller road crosses the mountain at an altitude of 3020 feet and covers a distance of about eleven and a half miles.

Route No. 2 follows Savage river and Crabtree creek from Bloomington to Swanton, reaching an altitude at Swanton of 2224 feet. The distance is about ten and a half miles.

Route No. 3 from Bloomington to North Glade follows the same grade as No. 2 until it reaches Frankville, where it turns north-west up Spring Lick and reaches an altitude of about 2350 feet. The distance is approximately twelve miles.

For many years a heavy flow of tourist traffic has passed over the National Pike, and much complaint has been made about the "terrible mountains" encountered. Persons from this community motoring to Oakland made a journey of 62 miles by way of Frostburg and the National Pike to Keyser ridgshrdlu shrdl to Oakland over a hard surfaced road by one of the proposed routes would be about 23 miles, a saving of 39 miles.

The Northwestern turnpike, nearing completion, offers a low-grade route from east to west and will attract the bulk of the tourist trade in the future unless a better route is offered, thinks Mr. Friend. With a low-grade link from here to Oakland, however, we will not only retain our present volume of tourist travel, but in view of the proposed development of the river road on the Maryland side to Cumberland will be able to attract further traffic thru this community over the new routes.

LOVE AT THE WINDOW

By GRACE ETHEL RANSOM

(© by W. G. Chapman.)

I HAVE fallen into the habit of dating everything in my life from the time of my crippling accident.

When I was a little girl, some years before my accident, I used to see the young fellow at the window of the adjacent house. The family had just moved in, but we did not know each other. In large towns this is often the way. I suppose we were interested in each other, as a boy and girl are apt to be, but if we glanced at each other it was with an aspect of unconcern, the mere casual look that one bestows upon a stranger.

I am three years older than Madge, my sister, and it always behooved me to set her a good example. Perhaps on that account I was especially anxious that she should not see me exchange glances with the boy at the window opposite. And Madge was always the beauty, while I am plain, what I could do Madge must not do without more serious consequences.

The house was ours. Our parents had died when we were small, and an aunt came to live with us and take charge. When she died I was twenty-two and Madge nineteen. We stayed on in the house, but our annuity was a tiny one. There was just enough money used to talk about our future. Of course we both expected to be married.

"If I marry first," said Madge, "you will come and live with us until you marry."

"Who would marry an ugly duckling like me?" I asked, though in my heart I knew some day the man would come.

Madge was indignant with me. She always saw me through the glasses of love. But beside Madge I was a black little dwarf. Madge had one of those saints' faces, and a wealth of golden hair that made her wonderful. If we had been like other girls—I mean, used to social life—her admirers would have been innumerable.

All this while the family had lived next door. We had come to know them slightly. Roger, the young man, was away at college. We had not seen him for years.

Then came the accident. It was a fall from our car in a collision, and when I recovered consciousness I was lying at home in my own bed, and the room was darkened. Before me sat Madge. She told me I was getting better, after three weeks of terrifying unconsciousness.

The days passed and I felt stronger. I wondered why the look of pain remained on Madge's face. At last they told me. I should never be able to walk without crutches again.

For a whole year I was an invalid. One day a famous visiting surgeon passed through our town. He spent four hours here, and two of them were at my beside. Madge had brought him, pleading that he should come and examine me. He shook his head frankly when he had completed the examination.

"There is one man who can replace the knee in the socket, and that is Ochs of Vienna," he said. "It has been tried in our hospitals, but never successfully. He has a special technic for repairing the atrophied ligaments. You must go to him if you wish to get well."

When he was gone Madge and I stared at each other in dismay. Even if the great surgeon were willing to operate for nothing, it was impossible to go to Vienna unless—we sold the house!

"We'll sell it," said Madge.

Of course I refused, and that was the beginning of our first big quarrel. For days Madge went about with a sullen face. But I would not give way. How could I jeopardize our future, her future, in order to get my knee straightened?

Finally we arrived at a compromise. The house should be sold—after Madge married. Then, if she married well, we could afford the sacrifice. I could live on less than two needed, and the knee could wait. The surgeon had said that. It could wait three years before it was too late to operate. Madge must get married within three years.

"I hope it won't be that long, Jenny," she said, as she kissed me in reconciliation.

Soon after that the young man began to appear at the window opposite again.

My invalid chair was by the window. I could no longer help seeing him when he was there. The initiative had, so to speak, passed out of my hands.

One day a great surprise awaited me. Madge had struck up a friendship with the boy next door. After that he used to venture to smile at me, and I smiled back. Madge had told me that he wanted to be introduced to me; meanwhile I felt that we were practically acquainted.

It is surprising what new interests an invalid acquires. I used to watch him through the window, as he sat writing at his table. He meant to be an author, Madge told me, and, having a little income of his own, he would not be driven to the expedient of writing trash for a livelihood. He hoped to do something big some day.

"But, Jenny," she said, "when are you going to let me bring him up to see you? You are always making excuses."

I made another excuse; but after she had gone I realized the nature of my selfishness. I was jealous of Madge.

Yes, that was it. I could not bear that my lameness, my homeliness should be contrasted with my sister's glorious beauty. Madge was prettier than ever. The boy next door spent a good deal of time in her company. Sometimes they walked down the street together. I fancied that people would be talking about them; I was sure they were going to announce their engagement soon.

And instead of being happy I was jealous and miserable. Perhaps the morbid fancies of a sick woman may mitigate such a crime. But a temptation was stirring in my heart, and it was this: If Madge married the boy at the window I would refuse to sell the house and go to Vienna. I would never allow her marriage with the man I loved to be the price of my physical redemption.

The man I loved? Yes, I did not disguise it from myself any longer. In my childhood days it was I who had discovered the boy at the window. It was I who had shown him to Madge, and he was mine by the right of priority, and by the right of my love.

I could love him even though we had never exchanged a word. For the first time in my life I hated Madge. I passed through all the variations of emotion possible as I sat at the window in my invalid's chair.

I think my mind had become a little distorted, for sometimes the violence of my hate frightened me. I was helpless—I was so helpless, and all the while I had to smile and pretend to be happy. I know Madge began to grow frightened; sometimes I would see her eyes bent on mine in the queerest way.

"Jenny," she said to me one day, "I am going to tell you a secret—not now, but some time. I think—" A pause. She looked at me with that happy smile that charmed every one, but now filled my heart with black hatred and impotent rage. And I smiled back, and felt like an assassin.

"I shall tell you," she said, "when you let me bring Harry to see you. No, not then, but afterward."

Harry! She had blurted out the name involuntarily.

"You need not trouble," I whispered, clenching my hands under the rug until the physical pain was intolerable. "You need not tell me."

Madge looked at me in pain. "How strange you are lately, Jenny," she said. "But I am going to tell you. When can I bring him?"

The wild pain at my heart demanded respite. Let me get the thing over. "Bring him at once!" I cried.

Madge was gone, and I was waiting at the window in my invalid chair. I saw her cross the street. She went freely into the house now. I watched till they came out together. His arm was linked in hers, and they were laughing. What a fool they had made of me!

It seemed an eternity before Madge came into the room. She laughed uncomfortably, I thought.

"You know Harry Tremont," she said with embarrassment. "He has wanted so much to see you."

"We are old friends," said Harry, taking my burning palm in his cool hands.

I don't know how the interview came to an end. But it was ended at last, and suddenly I could bear it no more. Harry was gone and Madge was kneeling at my side, and I was crying in her arms. And I was blurting out all my secret story of shame and misery.

Why, Madge's face was like an angel's as she raised it, and the tears in her eyes made them shine with exultation greater than anything I have ever seen.

"Jenny! Did you think that?" she whispered. "Why, you goose, it was you all the time—always you. Harry told me he loved you ever since he was a little boy and used to see you at the window!"

I can walk like other people now, and we still live in the old house—Harry and I and the little girl who has been named after Madge. Madge comes to see us often. She is happy with her husband. Sometimes a shade of jealousy touches my heart to see them together, for I learned to be very jealous of love in those days of sickness. But then I think of Madge's face that day, and I know that no other love can ever dim hers and mine.

Great Work That of Training Child Mind

If an Agassiz finds pleasure in digging among fossils in order that he may interpret the great story of prehistoric life; if a John Thoreau by Walden pond is delighted with his studies of bugs and beetles; if a John Burroughs on his little patch of ground in the valley of the Mohawk glories in his life among the birds and bees; if a Luther Burbank is enraptured with his work of transforming a worthless desert cactus into an edible fruit, or in producing sweeter rose or fairer lily; if these and other workers, whose names are legion, revel in the love of their work—then by what term shall we designate the joy that should be the teacher's who works not with mere fossils, nor with bugs or beetles, nor with birds, bees or flowers, but with the child who is at once the most complex, the most plastic, the most beautiful, the most wonderful of all God's creation? Yes, it's a wonderful thing to be a teacher; it's a great thing to teach school—Frank E. Simmons in the Educational Review.

Having Proper Appreciation

By H. IRVING KING

ROBERT RANGELY, seated in his luxurious car, was being driven down a certain avenue wherein are many shops and restaurants of the respectable but not fashionable sort. Peter Nelland, his chauffeur, was driving slowly owing to the traffic. Robert was well pleased with the world and with himself. He had riches, youth, "family," and was engaged to Flora Bedlow, the belle of the season. As the car crept along he was suddenly aware of an exceedingly pretty girl who, from the neighboring sidewalk was casting repeated glances in his direction.

They were such glances, too, as any young man would feel a pleasurable sensation in having a pretty girl cast at him. Admiring and affectionate might characterize them; and Robert was so perfectly well aware of his many excellences that he would have been the last person in the world to condemn any young lady from sharing in his own opinion of himself. But it was with no thought of treason to Flora that he watched the maiden as she paused for an instant at the door of a restaurant, cast one more of her ravishing looks in his direction, and disappeared into the establishment.

The next afternoon as he stepped into his car he said to his chauffeur, "Peter, drive down —— avenue, the same route we took yesterday—and when we come to —— street, drive slowly." And so it came about that at the same hour as the day before they were at the same place—and there was the pretty girl again, walking along the sidewalk toward the same restaurant and casting the same sort of glances toward the Rangely machine. "What a fool I am," thought Robert when the girl had disappeared into the restaurant. "The poor girl is evidently in love with me—there was no mistaking the looks she cast in my direction. I mustn't let her see me again."

And Peter Nellan thought: "What in blazes possessed the boss to want to drive down here today, I wonder? I saw Kittie out of the corner of my eye going toward the restaurant. I am sure she was looking at me; but I didn't dare to look in her direction—the boss raises Ned if I recognize any of my friends on the street while I am driving him. I'll see Kittie tonight and explain."

And that night he saw her and did explain.

"Oh, that's all right," said Kittie; "you told me your boss didn't like you to recognize anybody when you were out with him. But he! he!"—and Kittie giggled very deliciously, "you just oughter seen the way he rubbered at me. You'd have thought I had been making goo-goo eyes at him instead of at you—the way he looked. Ain't he the silly guy!"

"Well," replied Peter, "if I ever catch him making eyes at you I'll punch his head and throw up my job. And as soon as I get a raise I'll take you out of that blamed restaurant and we'll set up housekeeping in that little flat we looked at last week—or one just like it."

The next morning Robert Rangely sat in his bachelor apartments in doleful dumps. He and Flora Bedlow had had a falling out. Flora had intimated that Robert was conceited, Robert had taken offense—and there had been a quarrel. He felt that Flora did not appreciate him, and it cut him to the heart—for he was really in love with Flora. When he came to think it over there were lots of people who failed to appraise him at his proper worth.

But there was one star in the darkness—that girl down on —— avenue who evidently worked in a restaurant and whose soulful eyes had told the story of her heart as she looked at him. There was his refuge from a purblind world. He would go down to that restaurant, seek out the one person who valued him at his real worth, take her from her sordid surroundings and, by making her his wife, reward her for her perspicacity. The doorbell of his apartment rang and he let in Peter, who came to get his orders for the day and bring up his employer's morning mail.

"Please, Mr. Rangely," said Peter, getting down to business at once, "I would like a raise if you don't mind. You see, I am going to be married—and want a little more money to do it on. She's Kittie O'Brien; she works in a restaurant on —— avenue. Maybe you've noticed her, sir—she was going to work the last two times we drove by there. One could hardly help noticing Kittie. We've been engaged for a long time."

Robert's last lone star of hope blinked out. So it was upon the chauffeur, and not the master, that the nymph of the restaurant had cast those adoring looks!

"Very well, Peter," said Rangely in a hollow voice, "you shall have an increase."

With listless hand he picked up one of the letters Peter had laid on the table. The address was in Flora's writing. He opened it with trembling fingers and read: "Come and see me and make up—you goosie. Who cares if you do think well of yourself—I think well of you too."

New lubricating oil SAVES GASOLINE!

Hudsons, Dodges, Overlands prove it

IN hundreds of comparative road tests made with all types of cars and trucks astonishing savings in gasoline and oil consumption were noted—when the new "Standard" Motor Oil was used. 10% to 20% increase in gas mileage; 12% to 40% increase in oil mileage.

A typical test is one run with a Hudson over a 992 mile course from September 24 to October 22, 1925. This test showed a 27.1% increase in oil mileage; 12.4% increase in gas mileage; smoother operation of the motor at all speeds; more power; less drag on the hills; better lubrication and cooler motor; no carbon.

Verify these astonishing results in your own car. Get your crank-case filled today at a "Standard" Service Station or dealer. Then expect results. You can actually feel the difference.

AMERICAN EDUCATION WEEK.

American Education Week has become a permanent institution. It deals with problems so fundamental that it appeals to all the people and becomes more successful each year as parents and teachers understand that education touches the whole of life.

During this week let every community study not only its educational plant, but also its educational ideals and the community atmosphere in which children are brought up. Let parents visit teachers and teachers visit parents in an effort to solve the common problems of children. Let the week be a time of deeper understanding on the part of the people of the role education has played, is playing, and must play in the life of our great democracy.

American Education Week is the only time in all the year when the entire nation is called upon to dedicate itself to the great task of universal education for citizenship and democratic living. The schools themselves have a remarkable opportunity to teach every boy and girl his responsibility as a citizen to help maintain an education system which will perpetuate the best in the life and ideals of the republic.

In estimating the efficiency of our schools should the emphasis be placed on scholarship or citizenship—capacity or character—or both?

In the life of the individual, even as in the life of the nation, the activities of today are conducted in the light of their influence on the affairs of tomorrow. So it is with education—its prime business is the development of the individual to build the nation's future. "One's way of looking at things does not depend upon the size of the town he lives in but on the size of his mind." With education there need be no "Main Street."

Our educational system works in many directions. It enlarges the earning value of the child to its parents and to the nation. It brings an Americanizing influence to bear on the lives of our foreigners. It steps forth to rehabilitate the delinquent child, to restore the faltering physically. It develops research students, trains teachers and makes possible the professions.

These are essential in our scheme of things. However, education is especially concerned with the many. They hold the balance of power at the ballot. It is important, therefore, that they have an interest in and an understanding of public issues. It is to them we look for establishing a wholesome social morale. It is important, then, that they be educated to relish their work, and with a proper balance between work, worship and play, they may enjoy toil and utilize the increasing leisure allotted them without being bored or tempted to dissipation.

The welfare of this country centers around the training of the many. It depends upon a high social morale, an increasing number of mentally alert producers. It requires a citizenry with intilligence to value and enjoy social contacts, with sufficient educational foundation to admit of self-development, equipped to improve its leisure and imbude with sufficient sportsmanship to play the game. This is a contribution education makes; a contribution with intelligence, not ignorance, as the foundation.

Education should make more palatable the humbler tasks of life.

GRANTSVILLE

An all-day meeting of the teachers of the Grantsville unit was held at the high school Friday. A large attendance was present and a very instructive meeting was conducted by Miss Bannatyne, grade supervisor. The following visitors were present at the meeting: County Superintendent F. E. Rathbun, Misses Helen Kimmick, Marion Henion, Mary Selby, of the Supervisory staff of Garrett county, and Miss M. Theresa Weidenfeld, assistant State Supervisor, of Baltimore.

A father and son banquet was held by members of the agricultural class of the local high school on Tuesday evening of this week, which proved to be quite an interesting and enjoyable affair.

The funeral of the late Ralph Engle, whose death occurred on Wednesday of last week at the Miners Hospital as the result of injuries he sustained when he fell from an apple tree on his farm several days preceding, was held on Friday with services in the Grantsville Methodist Episcopal church. The funeral was one of the largest attended in Grantsville in many years. The church was filled to overflowing by the friends and relatives of the deceased who came to pay a last mark of respect to one so highly esteemed in life. Dr. Archibald Moore, pastor of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal church in Oakland, and a warm personal friend of the deceased over a long period of years, conducted the services in which the minister praised the unassuming Christian life of Mr. Engle. Those from a distance who attended the services included Ross Compton and Daniel Enlow, of Akron, O.; C. B. Layman, Newall, Iowa; Miss Esther Point, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Josephine Thrasher, Deer Park; Mr. and Mrs. C. Wadsworth, son and daughter, Uniontown, Pa.; Mrs. Wadsworth, Berlin, Pa.; Rev. C. J. Price, a former minister of the church here, and Mrs. Price and Mrs. Grimes, of Cumberland.

An entertainment entitled: "Deep Sea Revel," given by the winning team in the magazine contest recently conducted by high school students to the losing teams, "Pirates" and "Buccaneers," was given Friday evening at the high school. Many kinds of surprising games and a general good time were enjoyed by all.

The honor roll pupils at the Boucher school for the month of October, of which Miss Alverta Miller is principal, were Gilbert and Austin McKenzie and Fred. Gardner.

The Boucher school entertained the pupils of Turner school at a masquerade Hallowe'en party. A very entertaining program was given. Games were played and prizes given to Laura Turner for the best masqued costume from the Turner school, and to Hubert McKenzie of the Boucher school.

An interesting thank offering service at the Lutheran Missionary Society was led by Miss Christine Winterberg Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Richard Younkin. There were twenty-two members present.

The first quarterly meeting of the Grantsville charge was held in the Methodist church here Sunday last from 7:00 to 7:30 o'clock p. m. Rev. W. M. Shultz, of Fairmont, W. Va., had charge of the business meeting.

At the Women's Community Club meeting held Wednesday at the home of the president, Miss Mollie Dorsey, a motion was made to investigate the condition of Miss Ida Hutzel, of near Bittinger, who had asked for aid from the club. A committee was appointed who will visit the home and report to the club what is needed by the applicant. This committee is composed of Mrs. Harold Boucher, Mrs. W. Harold Miller and Miss Lulu Shaw.

The financial report of the club was read by Mrs. Harold Miller, showing the sum of $20.38 remaining in the treasury. A motion was also made to have the social committee arrange a social half hour after the business meeting. Christmas suggestions were made by Miss Lola Belle Green and a very interesting day was enjoyed. The singing of America by members of the club closed the meeting.

Harvey Gortner, a well known business man of Grantsville, enjoys the distinction of being the only Democrat elected on the local ticket at last week's election, being chosen as one of the County Commissioners. This fact, in a Republican county, speaks well for Mr. Gortner, showing the confidence reposed in him by his fellow citizens.

Prof. H. R. Webster, M. W. Whiteford and Miss Marion Price attended a demonstration lesson taught by Mr. Tarbell, the agricultural teacher at the Accident high school on Monday.

J. M. Willis, of Washington Court House, Ohio, who spent several days with Mrs. G. C. Keller and family in Grantsville, has returned to his home.

LOCH LYNN

The regular monthly meeting of the U. B. Ladies' Aid Society was held at the home of Mrs. A. L. Biggs here on Friday afternoon. Nine members and one visitor were present. A social hour followed the business meeting.

Mrs. Richard Ream was called to Pittsburgh one day last week by the death of her sister.

Fire was discovered in the residence of Mr. Floyd White here on Sunday afternoon. There was no one in the house at the time, and fortunately the discovery was made and the fire extinguished by neighbors before much damage resulted. A telephone call to Oakland brought the fire department out in a very few minutes but the services of the volunteers were not required but appreciated just the same.

Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Callis and family have moved from their farm to this village for the winter months.

Rev. Fultz and Rev. Aspinall are holding union revival services at the Pleasant Valley church.

There will be the usual services at both churches here next Sunday.

Homes, stores, churches, factories—all over the country—are being heated more comfortably and at less cost with the Caloric pipeless furnace.

The Caloric delivers practically 100% of the heat from the fuel directly into your rooms, and at the same time withdraws the cool air from the building. This establishes a natural air circulation, with the result that the building is heated more uniformly and fuel consumption is cut ⅓ to ½. There are now

OVER 135,000 CALORIC USERS

—in every state in the Union, in Canada, Alaska—and many in this locality.

Here a word of warning. Caloric success has been so revolutionary that it has aroused opposition from those who profit from making and selling out-of-date heating systems. The result is that many imitation pipeless furnaces have been put out which are failures. Be not misled by these failures. Most of them were designed to be failures—and have been marketed in vain attempts to discredit the rapidly-growing Caloric idea.

The Caloric is a 100% success—proven so by its record through years of making good—and by the guarantee of "satisfaction or money back" under which we sell it.

Saving Sight.

The Health Gnome, who is unofficially connected with the State Department of Health, is a collector of rhymes. He uses them as a minister does his text, as a sort of peg on which he hangs his sermon. The other day, from his favorite perch on the director's desk, he began to talk about eyes.

"We hear about drinking milk, eating green vegetables, taking care of our teeth and about all sorts of other things that will help to keep us well and strong—and they are very necessary—but we rarely hear about the eyes and the care they need. Now, I'd like to pass on to the children—and the grown-ups, too, some good advice that I found in a news letter from the Junior Committee for the Prevention of Blindness. Part of it is in rhyme and all of it preaches 'saving sight.' Here are some of the lines:

"S is for sad little Sadie,
Who never took care of her eyes,
So she hasn't the sight to read and write
And she sits in the corner and cries.

"I is for intelligent ida,
Whose glasses are shining and bright,
And she keeps them on straight both early and late,
So she always has very good sight.

"G is for gay little Georgie,
Who thinks that to read is great fun,
But he cleverly tries to take care of his eyes,
So he won't hold his book in the sun.

"H is for happy young Harry,
Who knows that it is foolish to wait
If your eyes need good care, to the doctor repair,
Or you'll find it will soon be too late.

"T tells about troublesome Tommy, who reads books late at night and ruined his sight. Finally the letter sums up the advice in plain prose in this way:

Hold your book about fourteen inches from your eyes.

Always read with your head up.

Avoid books printed in small type or on glossy paper.

Rest your eyes frequently.

If your eyes ache, or if you have trouble in seeing things distinctly, have your eyes examined by a doctor who has had special training in the care of the eyes.

"Now, I think that all of that is worth putting into practice. So long"—and he was gone again.

CALEB'S FAITHFULNESS REWARDED.

Joshua 14:6-15.

I wholly followed Jehovah my God—Joshua 14:8.

THE CONQUERORS.

Jericho was the beginning of conquest. Firmly settled there Israel climbed the hills to the entrance to the passes and having captured Ai rescued Gibeon with whom they had made a treaty of amity, believing they were not Canaanites. The other petty kingdoms of South Canaan determined that this renegade member of their circle who dared covenant with the invaders should be fittingly and fully punished, and they advanced to attack. There was a hurried call to Joshua for help and this battle was undertaken for the support of a pledge, the succor of a weak alien. Forced marches brought Israel into the fray. As the battle progressed the heavens were clouded and a terrible hail storm smote the retreating foe. Joshua prayed that the sun might be silent (Margin) or as the poetic quotation taken from the book of Jasher indicates that the storm might continue with the sun—god of the fleeing foe—hidden so that they might feel that their god was fighting against them. It was a great victory. Then Joshua turned to the north and cleared that section also in these years of struggle. For the conquest took anywhere from five to seven years, determined by our estimate of time from Kadesh-Barnea (v. 10). It was a wise plan, for it drove a wedge across the country and then beat each section in turn.

At the end of the struggle Israel was settled and was demanding some permanent arrangement for ownership, so they appealed to Joshua to apportion the territory. It was done by lot, so that no one could charge favoritism, a thing that was perilously often in their history. The tribes were given their portions and then there came a different claimant. His old comrade in arms, Caleb the Kenizite, asked for the setting upon his family of a particular section for himself. Joshua seconded the proposal for it came within her territory as a tribe. It is a great thing to so live that those who are vitally interested urge you to accept a lot among them and offer a free deed for it. Caleb had the good will of Judah. They wanted him for a neighbor.

A GREAT OLD MAN.

It was a wonderful picture that day in Gilgal. Joshua was ready to act as judge and his grizzled face smiled with satisfaction as he looked into that open countenance that, tho the hair was white, was all aglow with vigor. For this man of 85 had marched and fought thru all the campaigns and was now pleading for a further chance to tackle a hard job. They both remembered the giants of the hills, the men who made them look like grasshoppers, tho neither of these had ever felt that way. Now Caleb wanted to go and clean up the giant. Quite a job for an octogenarian! But age is never a handicap for the growing soul. At 84 Gladstone was sponsoring his famous Home Rule bill in Parliament. Newton was writing scientific treatises at 83; Tom Scott began the study of Hebrew at 86 and James Watt that of German at 85. Humbolt completed his "Cosmos" at 90. Homer wrote the Odyssey when old and blind, and Milton was chilled with age when he penned the story of Eden. No man is old until he loses his enthusiasms. Dr. Goucher, founder of Goucher College, was making airplane journeys at 75 and was planning further missionary advances at the time of his death. Caleb's explanation was that he had wholly followed God. And he who does, loses himself in a great cause and forgets to grow old. Something bigger than his own aches occupies all his thinking and makes for healthful living. God has laws for the body as well as for His worlds, and he who follows Him will find the body continuing to serve long after others have dropped by the way. "Why don't you find happy unchristian old folks?" someone was asked. "Because the devil doesn't have any old folks to be happy," was the rejoinder that has enough of truth in it to cause one to hesitate over his own allegiance. Even Caleb's body felt the refreshing vigor of following the God of life.

THE HIDDEN STREAM.

Caleb never sought anything just for himself. What he wanted was a chance to serve and he was willing to undertake tasks that others did not covet if it might be done. He was a supremely unselfish fellow all along the way. He believed God and there came to him the consciousness of His purpose for this people of whom he was a part. When he tramped thru the section of Hebron and saw the difficulties there he felt a consuming desire to win a victory over them. Then the people rebelled against the project and left him high and dry on the shore of his passionate wish. And in spite of every inducement with which he could ply them they still refused. Kadesh-Barnea became his supreme tragedy. He was forty years in advance of his generation. Many a man would have grown caustic in his remarks about the "numb skulls." But he merely settled himself to their pace across the sands and with never a complaint did his best to serve them in their slow advance. But when the night would come and the curtain of his tent shut out all the world he walked the hills of Hebron and lived his dream. It was singing in his soul and he held God's promise so securely that he knew he would reach his goal. Under the desert dust and slow progress the stream ran full and swift and from it he slacked his soul thirst thru many a year. It is the hidden well that makes a rich life possible.

THE BATTLE OF THE HILL.

What a day it was for the old, gray haired hunter when he was permitted to plan for the carrying out of his dream. He would be a veritable boy again. His faith in God was vindicated. His hope was being fulfilled. His determination, held for forty years, was to have its chance. It is very certain that there was little delay in pressing toward the Hebron of Abraham that now was to be redeemed to its former name by the overthrow of its giant owner. It was a St. George quest and from the hint in the first chapter of Judges it was no small task. But it was done. The Anakim were defeated and the flag of Caleb, "The Dog," was unfurled from the summit of the hill. And like a great dog he had trailed his desire until he ran his quarry to earth and held it joyously forth for the praise of the Master for whom he had always run. Jehovah God.

THE LIONESS DECIDES

By JOHN BREWSTER

(©, by W. G. Chapman.)

RITA, the big lioness, had been acting in an ugly manner. They say that lions can detect the character of their trainers; that an unfair trainer is in imminent danger of destruction should he enter the cage. They say, too, that a good woman can tame the wildest beast. Perhaps that is a legend, though.

Mademoiselle Charmeuse had been born Lily Leigh. Her parents were honest farmer folks way back in Shawnee county. But there had been a maternal grandfather who ran away to sea. It is not boys only that inherit the roving disposition. When she was seventeen Lily had shaken the dust off her shoes at the (back) entrance to the farm and departed in the wake of a traveling show, to graduate as Mademoiselle Charmeuse, the world-famous equestrienne. Afterward, when business prospered and the show increased in size and aspirations, she became Mademoiselle Charmeuse, the renowned lion-tamer.

Some folks think circus people are almost as bad as gypsies. That is not the case. There are no more moral and respectable people alive. Nobody had ever breathed a word against Mademoiselle Charmeuse's reputation. Goldini, the proprietor, and the motherly Madame Goldini treated her like a daughter, even if they had picked her up in an illegal manner, struck by her pretty face and daring. But when Madame Goldini grew too stout to continue to tame the lions, and resigned herself to looking after the welfare of the circus troupe, in comfortable middle life, Mademoiselle Charmeuse was thrown much more in touch with Goldini.

It was her task, together with Nero, the big Dalmatian, to put the lions through their paces at every country place where they exhibited. Goldini himself seldom entered the lion's cage nowadays. He was growing fat, like his wife; besides, the lions had begun to appear restless under his lash. Goldini knew what was the trouble. He knew it in his own soul. He loved Mademoiselle Charmeuse.

The girl, always responsive to the kindness of the couple, was staggered at the unmistakable display of the fact that Goldini's interest in her was no longer paternal. Love had never come into her life. How could it? What had she in common with the crowds of gaping boys who stared at her in her short skirts and spangles, or followed her with moon-calf protestations of devotion? She was as much alone as though she dwelt on a desert island.

Goldini loved her, and, in her presence, the man's own crushed nature flourished. He had been destined for better things. He was a university man; he had been in the Italian army, though none knew this intimate secret of his past. He had been a lieutenant and had fought in the ill-starred Abyssinian expedition, where he was cashiered for cowardice. The sight of the yelling tribesmen had been too much for his nerves; he had ridden away, leaving his men to face annihilation. That was a dark and bitter secret.

Yet he had never feared wild beasts. In Abyssinia he had learned to handle lions; he had shot them at 20 paces without a tremor of fear. It is easy to be a lion-tamer. On his arrival in America he had promptly stepped into a position with no other applicants, and graduated to a show of his own by marrying the proprietress. A good man, Goldini, a worthy citizen—but he had never lived, since his arrival in America, or loved, till now.

The girl's innocence, her beauty, appealed to him strongly. A little, half-starved thing when he met her, a wild mountain girl with aspirations above her station, he had taken her in part in pity, part on account of a business sense of her value. Now that he and she were thrown so much together, he knew that he loved her.

And the girl loved him. She seized this first love to her heart and lived in it. No matter if Goldini was nearly forty, and she but twenty-three. The consciousness of each other's love was in every word and gesture.

Only they and the lions knew, and Goldini, noticed to his dismay that his presence irritated them. He knew the reason. So he left the lion-taming to his pretty assistant, whom the great beasts seemed to love—and to Nero, whom they feared.

Only the night before, when the good motherly woman had gone into her tent, Goldini had told the girl of his love. She had not shrunk from him. Her mind was practical enough. She was thinking over his proposal. Let them leave the circus to Madame Goldini and go away together, with his savings, to begin life anew.

Then he had kissed her. Marvelous, perhaps, but it was the girl's first kiss of love. Her whole being thrilled to it. She did not know what she had answered. But afterward she had not slept. She thought of the motherly woman who had befriended her, of the rank and base ingratitude of such a course; and yet she loved him.

Suddenly a wild desire came to her to leave everything and go home. Her parents were hard country folks, but they would welcome her with her little money, and give her such affection as they had to bestow. They would even be proud of her in a way [illegible] was none of that Puritanism in Shawnee county which prevails in the New England states. It was a hard land where money alone counted.

The following afternoon her mind was not yet made up. It must be one course or the other, she knew. Either go off with her lover or go home. She could not endure the delay of a decision longer.

She stepped into the cage and at once Rita began to act strangely. Perhaps she knew; or perhaps the unrest in the girl's soul communicated itself to hers. The lioness lashed her tail and retreated, growling, to the opposite end of the cage. The other three lions began to growl in sympathy, and crouched beside her, snarling at each flick of the girl's whip and utterly ignoring the stands on which they were supposed to stand in a pyramid.

Nero was uneasy, too. Nero, at his mistress' heels, growled back at Rita, and crouched also, motionless watching her. The girl kept her eyes on Rita; she knew that the other lions would follow her example.

She saw, dimly, the crowd of sightseers outside the cage, seated upon their wooden benches. But she saw them askance, for her mind was set on dominating the lioness, and, though it was easy to escape, she knew that she would never be able to do anything with Rita again.

She advanced, flicking her whip, and Rita, growling, poised herself to spring. This was the crucial moment. Suddenly the girl heard Goldini's voice.

"Come out!" he screamed, half opening the cage. "It is no good! Come!"

At that moment, just as the girl's attention was distracted, though it was but a momentary wavering of an eyelid, Rita leaped. At the same time the other lions sprang into the air.

Rita's tawny body flew across the cage. But at the same moment Nero sprang to meet her. He could not stop the momentum of that bulk, but he turned it. Lioness and dog rolled in a tussle upon the floor.

At the same instant Goldini screamed and slammed the door of the cage.

The girl heard shrieks of panic among the audience. She was conscious of the circus employees pulling frantically at the door of the cage. Before her she saw the dead body of the faithful hound, and the lioness and lions worrying it. She retreated toward the door. Rita sprang for her again, but the lash of the whip caught her across the nose, and, swerving, she flung herself against the bars. They quivered, but stood fast, and before she could turn again the girl had stepped backward to safety through the open door.

She found herself lying in the center of a crowd of strangers. Her first thought was of Nero. Then, remembering, she began to weep hysterically. Her second was of Goldini. He had slammed the door and left her to die!

Goldini's ancient malady had broken out once more. And it was at the turning point of the girl's career. For suddenly she realized that this thing had effectively answered the question that had tormented her.

She rose to her feet and staggered through the crowd. She meant to go away, right away, she could not see Goldini again; all her love was dead.

A gray-haired woman was clasping her to her breast. The girl looked into her face a full minute before she realized who this was.

"Oh, mother!" she sobbed. "O, take me away, take me away!"

Through the silent crowd the gray-haired, black-bonneted woman led the girl in the short skirt with the spangles.

Photographs of Mars Confirm Old Beliefs

News from Mars does not reach us easily, even through the best telescopes, because the planet looks so very small. So far astronomers have not been able to get photographs of its disk bigger than the butt end of a lead pencil.

But an interesting bit of news has just come from Mars through photographs made by means of the telescope of the Mount Steward observatory in America.

The dark patches which appear on the red disk when springtime comes to Mars and the polar snows melt can now be declared much more certainly than before to be plants or shrubs or moss, or, at any rate, something green that grows.

When the polar snows melt on Mars the water flows into the dry places and the deserts become alive with vegetation. All this happens very quickly, and we may reasonably speculate that great marshes are formed.

This was suspected 30 years ago. But there were many doubters, some of whom declared that there was no water on Mars, others that it was always freezing there, and others that there was no atmosphere to support clouds.

In the last few years these doubts have been much lessened. Water has been declared possible, because water vapor in the Martian atmosphere is proved, and the temperature of Mars is now believed to be as high as that of a cold day in an English March.

The new photographs from Mount Steward confirm these beliefs in so strong a way that we may say that they are a piece of news about the planet which may be labeled "official." Instead of being classed as mere rumor or report.

NEW KINGWOOD ROAD TO OPEN ON THANKSGIVING

Special Watchmen Will Be On Duty to Stop All Heavy Traffic Over Green Stretch

The Morganotwn-Kingwood state highway was substantially completed yesterday at noon when the Keeley Construction eompany poured the last concrete on the gap between Greer and the Preston county line, and W. S. Downs, divisional engineer for the state road eommission, authorized the announcement last night that the road will be open to "light traffic" on the morning of Thanksgiving day, November 25.

A 500-foot gap remained to be completed when work was started Saturday morning. About two-thirds of this was poured Saturday and the last section was closed up Sunday morning.

In announcing that the road would be open on Thanksgiving day, Mr. Downs said: "The newest concrete will be only 11 days old on Thanksgiving day. Concrete at this time of the year should be given at least 21 days to set. However, the concrete has been treated wtih calcium chloride, and light traffic will not hurt it on Thanksgiving day.

"We will have watchmen at both ends of the green strip of concrete on Thanksgiving day and for several days thereafter. They will be instructed to let all light traffic through but vehicles with solid tires and all trucks will be turned back. We are doing this to accommodate the people, and we will expect their cooperation in seeing that heavy vehicular traffic is not permitted over the short section of new road. If we receive satisfactory cooperation, we will likely repeat the experiment in other new highway construction."

Work to Be Done Yet.

Although the completion of the gap between Greer and the county line will permit through traffic from Morgantown to Kingwood, the road is not actually completed. In addition to the construction of beams and the installation of guard rails, the contractor must widen a stretch of the road near Greer which was paved to a width of only eight feet because of a slip. There are also three railroad crossings for industrial purposes which the Greer Limestone eompany will pave. In addition, the concrete over the new bridge at Dellslow has to be paved. Mr. Downs said that one half of this would be paved immediately and the other half graded and cindered, and that the other half will be paved when the first half is ready to open to traffic.

Important Highway.

The opening up of this state highway is regarded as an event of prime importance. No highway leading into Morgantown will bring more business into this city. It furnishes easy access to this city for the populous and prosperous Decker's Creek valley and other towns in Preston county, which were not satisfactorily accommodated by the M. & K. passenger train service.

It is expected that very shortly after the highway is opened, the Monongahela West Penn Public Service Corporation will begin the operation of a through bus service between Morgantown and Kingwood, serving Sturgisson, Greer, Masontown, Reedsville and other small towns. This corporation already operates buses between Morgantown and Dellslow and between Reedsville and Kingwood.

Valuable to Tourists

The highway will also have great attractiveness for tourist motorists, since it forms one of the links in a through highway from Washington, Pa., via Waynesburg, Morgantown, Kingwood, Terra Alta, Oakland, Md., Elk Garden, Hartmonsville, Romney, and Capon Bridge to Winchester, Va., that is more than forty miles shorter than the route from Washington to Winchester via Uniontown, Cumberland and Hagerstown. As a result, a large part of the tourist traffic from the middle east to Florida is expected to go over this road instead of by way of Uniontown and Hagerstown, not only because the route is shorter, but also because the highway is more modern, less mountainous and offers equal, if not greater, scenic beauty.

An appropriate ceremony to mark the formal opening of the road is expected to be arranged by a joint committee representing Monongalia and Preston counties.—Morgantown New Dominion, Nov. 15th.

A large number of ladies rode in the procession, earrying banners and flags. Speeches were made by E. H. Sincell and W. P. Townshend, of the Oakland bar.

Oakland High School Notes

Girls' Declamation Contest.

The girls' declamation contest of Oakland High School was held in the Maryland Theatre on last Thursday, November 11th. The contestants did excellent work, but we feel especially proud of Teresa Kendall, who was given first place by the judges. Mary Jane Offutt came a close second, and Ruth Fike, third. Teresa will represent Oakland High School in the Fraley County-wide Declamation Contest to be held at Kitzmiller on November 23rd.

Did You Know That?

Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health, says:—Did you know that there are over

8,000 persons who are ill with tuberculosis in the counties of Maryland; that

Tuberculosis clinics are held thruout the State each month under the auspices of the State Department of Health and the Maryand Tuberculosis Association for the purpose of finding those who are ill with the disease and of helping them to get the proper care; that

238 clinics of this sort have been held since the first of this year; that

They were held at 75 places, covering nearly every section of the State and within reach of more than five hundred scattered communities; that over 600 new patients were found and advised through their own family physicians as to the care they should have; that

95 per cent of all the patients were sent to the clinics by their own doctors and the rest through friends; that over

400 doctors in the counties eooperated with the State Department of Health by referring their patients to the clinics; that

A special effort is constantly being made to reach and care for young children and other persons who have been exposed to the disease, while their condition is still favorable; and

Did you know that

70 per cent of the money that is raised in a county from the sale of the Christmas seals goes back into that county for the benefit of local tuberculosis activities, including the work of the public health nurses for those sufferng from tuberculosis, and that the remaining

30 per cent goes to the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, for the maintenance of the tuberculosis elinics and for other work of the. association including the support of the Miracle House—the place to which children threatened with tuberculosis are sent during the summer, and where their powers of resistance against the disease are built up by wholesome food, and great doses of sunshine and fresh air and a good time—and lastly

This eomes to tell you that

The sale of the Christmas seals for the benefit of next year's work begins Thanksgiving Day. Of course you will want to buy you share.

Mr. William C. Jester, who has been the County Agent in this county during the past four years, has tendered his resignation to the State Director to become effective on January 1st, following which he will go to Elkins, West Va., to accept a similar position vacated there. Mr. Jester's work in this county has been eminently satisfactory to the great majority of the agriculturalists and his contemplated removal to another field is sincerely regretted by the people of the county.

GRANTSVILLE

The Fraley preliminary declamation contest was held in the W. O. W. hall here on Wednesday evening, the 17th inst., wth nine contestants. A small admission was charged to help defray the expenses of the winning contestants to attend the final contest to be conducted at Kitzmiller on the 23d inst.

The father and son banquet given by M. W. Whiteford and the agricultural department of Grantsville high school on Tuesday evening, was quite a success. The agricultural room was beautifully decortaed in evergreens and black and gold crepe paper was festooned from the center of the room to each table. Lighter candles were upon each table, making it all very attractive. There were forty-eight fathers and sons, including Mr. J. D. Blackwell, of Baltimore; Superintendent F. E. Rathbun, of Oakland, and Prof. R. R. Webster, who were guests of honor. Each one gave splendid addresses on the work done by the agricultural classes in Grantsville and the county. Miss Marian Price and her home economic classes prepared and served the banquet, which was delicious and appetizingly served in courses. The menu consisted of fruit cocktail, roast chicken, dressing, buttered carrots, baked corn, mashed potatoes, hot rolls and jelly, salad, cottage cheese with pineapple ice, cider, individual pumpkin pies with whipped cream, salted nuts, mints, coffee.

M. W. Whiteford was toastmaster. Everyone present enjoved the banquet and the pleasant evening together, thanking all who had helped to make it a success.

The Grantsville Musical Club held its sixth meeting of the second year at the Holmes-Wallace studio, Tuesday evening. The study of the evening lead up to the beginning of the 17th century with illustrations from English composers of the 16th century. A business meeting was held at the close and a motion was made and carried to discontinue the club meetings for the present. Miss C. Winterberg sang Laeedaren, by Mozart ,which closed the evening's meeting

Mrs. C. S. Zeller has returned from a visit with her parents in Grove City, Pa.

Mrs. Annie Getty is visiting relatives in Meversdale, Pa., this week.

A daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Noah Miller on Tuesday morning.

Grantsville was greatly shocked and every resident saddened Wednesday evening by the sudden illness and swift death of Mrs. Irene Poling, wife of William I. Poling, of this town. Mrs. Poling left her home about 6:30 o'clock in the evening in good spirits and apparently in the best of health, to visit her mother, who has been ll for some time at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Albert Swauger, which is located a short distance away. She stopped at a grocery store on the way and after making her purchases left the store, but before arriving at her sister's home she became very faint and weak and called for help. She was enabled, however, to reach the Swauger porch where she was heard by Mrs. Swauger, who, with others in the home, assisted the stricken woman to a couch in the living room. Dr. N. R. Davis was called to attend Mrs. Poling but his efforts to relieve her were fruitless and she died at 8:30, death being due to appoplexy.

Mrs. Poling was the eldest daughter of the late Thomas Henry Bittinger, Civil War veteran, and was born at Bittinger on June 22, 1875. Her parents moved to Grantsville when she was quite young, having spent the greater portion of her life here. She married William I. Poling, of Piedmont, West Va., in March, 1917. Mrs. Poling is survived by her husband, one son, Emerson C. Hayes, by a previous marriage, and also by her aged mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Bittinger; two sisters, Mrs. Bertha Swauger, of Grantsville, and Mrs. Anne Grady, of Piedmont, W. Va.; and by a brother, Lawrence G. Bittinger, of Grantsville.

Mrs. Poling was well known in the community. Her amiable disposition won and retained for her many excellent friends. She was a member of the Lutheran church at Westernport, Md., where she resided a short time. Her funeral occurred from the Grantsville Lutheran church Saturday morning at ten o'clock, the Rev. S. D. Sigler, pastor officiating. Interment was made in the Grantsville cemetery.

DAIRY SPECIAL GREETED MONDAY BY LARGE CROWD

Ten Car Train Visited at Station By Hundreds of Interested Men and Women of County

To the disinterested person who visited Oakland last Monday the town seemed like a hustling, thriving, busy little city full of pep and enthusiasm. To those who knew what was going on it brought a realization of the fact that the people of this eommunity are full of the spirit of eo-operation and friendliness, for business men of the town and farmers from nearly every nook and corner of the county, women and children, old folks and young people were all intermingling together at the Maryland Dairy Products Special, a train of ten cars on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, which reached Oakland Sunday afternoon and was shifted to the freight yard early Monday morning.

The train was operated jointly by the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Company and the National Breeders' Association and was something entirely new to the people of Garrett county.

Within the cars were stabled some of the finest purebred Jersey, Guernsey and Holstein cattle obtainable and in order to see them the train was literally packed frrom the time it was opened at 8:30 until it pulled out of the local yard at noon. In addition to inspecting the cattle the crowds were entertained by talks on dairy subiects by J. A. Conover, the dairy specialist of the University of Maryland, who addressed in all a total of opprozimately five hundred persons, one of the cars of the train with a limited capacity being used as a forum.

The sole purpose of the train was to interest the people in better dairying and it surely served its purpose while in Oakland. A continuous string of school children passed through the exhibit cars where the value of milk was presented to them in a way they will always remember.

The display of purebred bulls was similar to a county fair of considerable proportions. The demonstration on a flat car, one of the units of the train, given by Mr. Eno, of the American Jersey Cattle Club, pointed out the good and bad features to look out for when buying a dairy cow.

One of the most interesting features connected with the visit of the train to Oakland was the awarding of the gift heifer which was purchased and awarded by the business men of Oakland. Mrs. Allie Speicher, of Accident, happened to be the fortunate one in the drawing, and she chose a Guernsey, which will be shipped to her within a week or two.

Purebred bulls were sold from the train to W. S. Friend, Oakland; D. A. King, Accident; Russell Stover, Oakland, and Jasper Riley, of Pleasant Valley. The first named purchaser selected a Jersey, while the others chose Guernseys.

Too much cannot be said about the meeting for the women at the Court House at which there were more than 150 present to hear the talk of Miss Stark on proper foods for health.

At the high school Prof. Happy in his address kept the students in a constant uproar of laughter and imparted to them at the same time some exeellent thoughts.

The results of this train and the success of its visit to Garrett county has certainly demonstrated what can be accomplished when everyone cooperates. County Agent Jester had much to do with the arrangement much to do with the success of the day and with the fact also that the train and its exhibtis were brought here.

JOSHUA RENEWING THE COVENANT.

Joshua 24:14-25. Read Chapters 23-24.

Choose you this day whom ye will serve; * * * but as for me and my house, we will serve Jehovah.—Joshua 24:15.

THE CONQUEST OF THE CONQUEROR.

Israel was in the back-wash of war. They had swept across Jordan, conquered Jericho, taken Ai, made a treaty with Gibeon, rolled back the kings of the South in disastrous rout, put to flight the armies of the North and had entered upon the peace of conquest. These desert raiders, living from hand to mouth, knowing only the covering of a tent, were scattered among the remnants of the conquered. Probably every man of them had a dozen slaves taken from among the overthrown. These fighting men would be glad to plan for a slave girl or two to serve the wife as she came to her new home. There was an unexampled flood of prosperity that threatened to sweep many a man completely off his feet in the sudden riches that he had won by his sword. Not only was he newly rich, but he was living in towns and houses that he had taken by force and in these unaccustomed surroundings he needed the guiding hand of some one who knew the proper procedure. It was out of such conditions that grave peril arose. For as they faced a more advanced civilization than that of the tent they were obliged to go to school to the conquered. And if they accepted teaching in one field it was only natural that they should get advice in many fields and their religious life was in danger of being merged into that of the land. For gods were local in their thinking and Jehovah was an imported Deity that might need instruction also. This is ever the path of history. Rome conquered Greece and was mastered by her culture. The Barbarians took Rome only to be enslaved by her vices and enriched by her civilization. The same thing happens when ideas march across the world. Christianity accepted the surrendered sceptre of the Caesars and the dark ages spell the consequences. Prohibition was written into the Constitution as a new adventure in government and the vociferous wine and beer advocate is making converts among those who ran him completely off the field. It was this situation that Israel faced—a perennial problem in both morals and civilization.

THE PROTEST OF THE PATRIOT.

Joshua was too astute not to perceive the drift of sentiment and the weakening of the convictions of the people he had led into the land. It speaks mightily of the ability of this man contrasted so often with Moses to his own disparagement that he divined as swiftly as that leader might have done the direction public opinion was taking. His ear might not have been to the ground as completely as a modern politician's but it was keen enough to catch the whisper of events. He was no fool in the field nor was he one in the council chamber. Overshadowed by his predecessor as he certainly is the more he is studied the larger he becomes. He faced the situation with the same decisiveness that had brought him many a victory on an uncertain battle ground. He would let all the leaders of Israel know whether they were drifting. And it is the duty of patriots to study the situation in which the country finds itself with as much care as they do their own business and know what is going on. He who listens only to propaganda of interested parties seeking to serve their own pockets is very far from measuring up to the patriotism of this old wiseacre. Nor can they be less eager to combat the wrong than he and retain their boast of loyalty to their land. Joshua called a meeting of the makers of public opinion and went over the situation with them. They probably went home saying, "The Old Man is getting all fussed up over a mighty small matter." They were possibly a bit irritated over it and certainly did [illegible] about it. But if they judged Joshua a quitter they had forgotten his past. He could battle for ideas as well as for acres. There was another summons, likely more imperious than the last, this time to that place of memories; Sheckem of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, of their own covenanting upon their entry into their land of promise. He was giving his best thinking to this matter certainly and shames many of us today.

CALLING IN THE RESERVES.

In the streets of Paris there was a howling mob. A figure walked along the sidewalk to be lifted into a place of prominence as one of the leaders shouted: "Sixty years of pure life is about to address you." There was utter silence dominated by character alone. It was the same here. Joshua flung all his slender life into the struggle and brought the quuestion of loyalty to Jehovah into the immediate thinking of his people. Modestly he recounted their history, giving all credit for every success to God instead of to the actors in the events. There is never an "I did it" in the whole recital. It is quite easy to see that he is no 100 per cent American, for we do like to blow our own horns. There follows the clear challenge of any half-way business. "Quit fooling yourselves and be one thing or the other! But as for me and my house we are for Jehovah." It was a great plea, finely made and finely reinforced.

DAMMING THE STREAM.

Of course they were simply swept off their feet and voiceferously declared their determination. But Joshua knew how much of it was wind so he proceeded to puncture their intention to go in the same old fashion of mixed religions by declaring they were simply dodging and could not follow Jehovah that way. There was less noise this time but more purpose so Joshua put it all in writing and they subscribed to the provisions of the new record. Then he set up a pillar and they solemnly swore to accept it as a witness of their doings that day. So the final battle of this great leader was closed. He was endeavoring to dam the stream of their desire by every method his shrewdness could suggest so that the passion of their religious zeal might be directed into the service of the God of the Hebrews only. And the story adds the statement that it worked all thru the days of these men who were partners in the pledge. It is one of the finest of tributes to the work of Joshua that exists. He was able to so carry them over into his thinking that they kept their vow during their years of headship. Jericho has nothing on Scheehem when it comes to victories.

NOTICE TO ALL DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS

This is to notify you that all delinquent taxes must be paid without further delay. So far I have been very lenient with you, hut the State and the county are demanding collection of all delinquent taxes.

Changes in the assessments cannot be made by the Treasurer. If any assessment is incorrect the matter should be taken up with the County Commissioners.

A great many persons complain because their property is advertised for delinquent taxes and say they are put to a great deal of expense and humiliation on account of same. Remember if your property is advertised for delinquent taxes it is your fault and not the fault of the Treasurer. Pay up your taxes in full on or before the first day of January of each calendar year and your name will never appear on the delinquent list.

I want to be of the greatest service to you and help you all I can, but I can not help you much unless you try to help yourselves by being prompt in the payment of your taxes and giving me all the information you can.

Never allow more than one years taxes to he upon you at a time; if you have been in the habit of allowing your taxes to double up, he sure to get rid of that habit at once, as it is not fair to me nor hest for yourself and cannot be permitted longer.

If you find anything wrong come in and see me and talk the matter over before complaining or mentloning it to others.

Yours very sincerely,
ALBERT L. LEE, Treasurer,

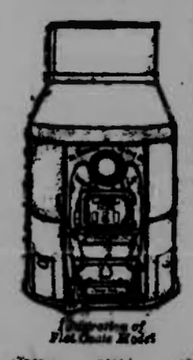
The CALORIC HEATS THEM ALL



Homes, stores, churches, factories—all over the country—are being heated more comfortably and at less cost with the Caloric pipeless furnace.

The Caloric delivers practically 100% of the heat from the fuel directly into your rooms, and at the same time withdraws the cool air from the building. This establishes a natural air circulation, with the result that the building is heated more uniformly and fuel consumption is cut ⅓ to ½. There are now —in every state in the Union, in Canada, Alaska—and many in this locality.

OVER 135,000 CALORIC USERS

Here a word of warning. Caloric's success has been so revolutionary that it has aroused opposition from those who profit from making and selling out-of-date heating systems. The result is that many imitation pipeless furnaces have been put out which are failures. Be not misled by these failures. Most of them were designed to be failures—and have been marketed in vain attempts to discredit the rapidly-growing Caloric idea.

The Caloric is a 100% success—proven so by its record through years of making good—and by the guarantee of "satisfaction or money back" under which we sell it.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryson Glotfelty, of near Addison, Pa., are spending today in Oakland settling up business matters in connection with the sale of their personal property which took place at their McHenry farm yesterday.

Messrs. Walter W. Dawson and H. L. Jones went to Baltimore Tuesday morning to attend the sessions of the Grand Lodge of Masons. They were accompanied as far as Frederick by Mrs. Jones, who stopped there to visit her daughter, Miss Helen Jones, a Hood College student.

Mrs. Ruth Herbert, of Washington, D. C., who was here with her aunt, Mrs. Jennie Tabb, for several weeks, returned to her home yesterday. Mrs. Tabb went the same day to Morgantown, W. Va., where she will visit her sister, Mrs. W. L. Boughner, later going to Washington to make her home.

Rev. H. T. Bowersox, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran church, Cumberland, addressed the Lutheran Brothehood of the local Lutheran church last Monday evening, at which approximately seventy were present. Rev. Bowersox's address was preceded by a musical program rendered by members of the church and was followed by refreshments served by the women of the congregation. The speakers theme was the "Building of Youth," and was quite applicable to the occasion, it being a father and son meeting of the organization.

In today's issue of The Republican, Mr. James L. Pollock announces that he will sell at public auction his residence property, located on Second street, on Saturday, November 27th, at the hour of two o'clock p. m. The property to be sold is beautifully situated and is in good condition. The lot fronts 112 feet on Second street and extends back about 369 feet.

George Hanst, of Oakland, a senior in the College of Arts and Sciences at the West Virginia University, Morgantown, W. Va., has been pledged by Fi Bater Capper, campus mock fraternity. Only students in the University who achieve unusual success in campus activities are eligible for membership in the organization. Mr. Hanst is editor of the Athenaeum, the University tri-weekly newspaper.

The public auction of the personal estate of the late King Delawder and also of the real estate occupied by him during his lifetime, was attended by quite a large number of people on Saturday last. Spirited bidding on the part of several who desired the real estate resulted in running the price up to $6000, it being sold at that figure to M. J. Canty, who will occupy it with his family within a short time. Mr. Canty and his family have been residing here for several years past, occupying a home on West Center street.

Mr. J. W. Butt, who has been in the Dixon store in Oakland for several years, has resigned his position and expects to leave tomorrow for Shinnston, West Va., where he and his brother George Butt have some coal interests that are being developed, and who will engage actively in the mining and shipping of coal. Mr. Butt has a large circle of friends in Oakland and community who will learn with regret of his contemplated removal to another State. Mr. Butt's family will remain in Oakland until [illegible] January 1st when they will go to join him at Shinnston.

Laura E. Helmick and R. C. Helmick vs. Walter Fazenbaker and Clara Fazenbaker, his wife; Ada Snyder and Adam Snyder, her husband; Lebbeus Fazenbaker and Victoria Fazenbaker, his wife; Lydia Bittinger and William Bittinger, her husband, and Florence Fazenbaker. No. 2706 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of the real estate of which Esther Fazenbaker, late of Garrett County, Maryland, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The bill states:—

1st. That Esther Fazenbaker, late of Garrett county, Maryland, deceased, was in her lifetime and at the time of her death seized and possessed of a certain parcel or tract of land situate, lying and being in District No. 12, of Garrett County, Maryland, the same containing one hundred acres, and being known and designated as Military Lots Nos. 2351 and 2353, and being the same which were conveyed unto the said Esther Fazenbaker by deed from Solomon Sibert, bearing date May 3rd, 1874, and duly recorded in Liber W. H. T., No. 4, folio 393, one of the Land Records of Garrett County, Maryland, a certified copy of which said deed is herewith filed, marked "Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 1," and prayed to be taken and considered a part of this bill of complaint.

2nd. That while so seized and possessed of said real estate in Garrett County as aforesaid, the said Esther Fazenbaker departed this life intestate, at Orlando, Florida, on the 7th day of November, 1925, leaving surviving her as her next of kin and heirs at law the following children, to-wit: Walter Fazenbaker, a son who intermarried with Clara Fazenbaker, and who now resides in Garrett County, Maryland; Ada Snyder, a daughter, who intermarried with Adam Snyder, the said Ada Snyder now residing in Garrett County, Maryland, and the said Adam Snyder now residing in the State of Pennsylvania; Lebbeus Fazenbaker, a son, who intermarried with Victoria Fazenbaker, both of whom now reside in the State of Pennsylvania; Lydia Bittinger, a daughter, who intermarried with William Bittinger, and who now reside in the State of West Virginia; Florence Fazenbaker, a daughter, single, who resides in Garrett County, Maryland, and Laura E. Helmick, one of the plaintiffs, a daughter, who intermarried with R. C. Helmick; all of said parties being of full age.

3rd. That the said real estete is not susceptible of partition in kind without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein and in order to make a division of said interests it will be necessary that the said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof be distributed according to law.

4th. That it would be for the benefit and advantage of all of said parties, that the said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof distributed to those entitled to the same.

5th. That the estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker is indebted to the said R. C. Helmick in the sum of $537.84 for funeral expenses and other expenses incident thereto; to the First State Bank, of Grantsville, in the sum of $110.00, and to William Winterburg in the sum of $31.00; less such amount as may be paid upon said claims by the administrator of the estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker, statements of which said claims will be filed among the papers in this said case when the amount of said indebtedness to be paid out of the proceeds of sale or the real estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker shall have been finally determined.

The bill then prays for a decree for the sale of the real estate, for the payment of such bills as may be properly proven and for distribution of the balance of the money obtained from said sale amongst those entitled to the same, for general relief, for the writ of supbonea, for the resident defendants and for an order of publication against the non-resident defendants.

It is thereupon this 18th day of November, 1926, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland, in Equity, that the plaintiffs by having a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett County once in each of four successive weeks before the 18th day of December, 1926, give notice to the said absent defendants Adam Snyder, Lehbeus Fazenbaker, Victoria Fazenbaker, Lydia Bittinger and William Bittinger, of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 4th day of January, 1927, to show cause if any they have, why a decree should not be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 51. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, NOVEMBER 25, 1926 NUMBER 40.

OAKLAND MERCHANTS TO HAVE COMMUNITY SALE

Wednesday, December 8th. Selected By Body Interested—Advertisements Next Week

Appreciating the fact that community sale days have worked out successfully in other parts of the country adjacent to Oakland, the business men and others, at a meeting held on Monday night at the City Hall, definitely decided to inaugurate a community sales day in Oakland, the date for such sale being set for Wednesday, December 8th, and in which it is expected that every merchant and business man in the town will join.

The plan being now worked out by a committee named by the chairman of the Business Men's Association, is to buy a page of advertising space in The Republican and in the spaces alloted on this page to the various advertisers they are to advertise but one article at an exeedingly low price. The article to be advertised must be a staple one and the price at which it is advertised will remain good for but the day of the community sale. In addition to the newspaper advertising several thousand circulars will be printed and these will be mailed out to farmers and to persons residing in near-by towns, so that all will have notice of the bargains offered by the various merchants.

Should this first sale prove the success anticipated for it by those participating, it is probable that the affair will occur once a month hereafter, beginning about January 10th of next year.

The community sales inaugurated in other towns were begun in a very small way. At first circulars only were used to advertise them. Later a page in the weekly newspaper published in the town was used. Now two full pages of a daily paper published in a near-by city are bought and the community idea is spread before the general public, with the result that on the day the community sales are a feature in the town it is crowded with eager buyers who in many cases secure wonderful baragins in staple and useful household goods and commodities. It has proven sucessful elsewhere and it should be eminently successful here where the citizens and those who trade in Oakland have always found the merchants square in their dealing and in the representations concerning their goods which can and are bought by consumers at a lower figure than in larger towns where the expense of conducting the same lines of business is higher owing to increased rents and higher salsalaries paid their employes.

Oakland High School Notes.

On Wednesday of this week we celebrated Thanksgiving by a program especially arranged for the occasion.

First came a vocal solo by Irene Smouse, which was very fine. Then the "History of Thanksgiving" was given by Mary Louise Helbig. The reading given by Ruth Fike was greatly enjoyed by all. The sextet, sung by Lucile Ours, Louise Lewis, Mary Jane Offutt, Ralph Blake, Mitchell Franklin and Harold Yutzy, proved that we have some musicians in our school. "A Thanksgiving Story" was the title of a dialogue rendered by James Dodge and George Altstetter. James, as "Pa," related to George, his son, the way Thanksgiving originated. to George's discomfort. Mary Jane Offutt gave a reading entitled "Radio Recipe" which caused much laughter and was enjoyed greatly. Louise Lauer gave us some very interesting news and some good jokes in the form of "School News." The program was ended by a chorus sung by the school.

Declamation Contest.

Three cheers for Teresa Kendall! She came off third winner in the Fraley Declamation contest. The selection was entitled "How the LaRue Stakes Were Last." Teresa "put it over wonderfully," and it was hard work after the story had first been told by the winner of first honors, Miss Louise Browning, of Kitzmiller.

Bazaar and Food Sale.

The success of the bazaar was measured by the intake of $30 clear for the athletic and school funds. The O. H. S. appreciates all of its friends who so kindly patronized the bazaar. Especially do we want to thank the Messrs. G. A. Fraley & Sons, who gave to the students the use of their store room for the occasion.

OAKLAND PUBLIC LIBRARY

Finances Are Being Gathered to Carry on Work and Pay Expenses.

The Oakland Free Public Library is eleven years old at this time. It has been recently moved into rooms inthe Garrett National Bank building which the public is cordially invited to inspect any Wednesday or Saturday.

The library started with 35 books and now has nearly 3000 volumes. A competent librarian is in charge and people throughout the county have the same advantages in securing good reading matter, on a smaller scale, as their city neighbors. A nominal sum is charged for new books which may be taken and after reading returned.

The officers of the Library Association are: Chairman, Mrs. E. Z. Tower; vice chairman Mrs. H. A. Loraditch; treasurer, Mr J. M. Jarboe; secretary and librarian, Mrs. Nettie Thrasher, while the board of directors is composed of Mrs. Wm. R. Offutt, Mrs. N. I. Broadwater, Mrs. J. L. Pollock, Mrs. J. C. Reaninger, Mrs. Jas. Willison, Mrs. Paul Naylor, Mrs. Andrew Helbig, Mrs. James D. Hamill. Mrs. G. Semmes Hamill, Jr., and Mr. G. A. Fraley.

"Since the library has been in existence various means of financing it have been tried. Patrons are supposed to give $1 per annum to help pay rent, librarian, incidentals, etc., also for new books. This last being a considerable item, as wear and tear on books in any library is considerable.

Recently in moving there was considerable expense caused by necessary carpenter work.

Entertainments have been given in the past to raise money, but it was recently decided by the board to ascertain as nearly as possible if all interested persons would not donate at least a small amouunt to pay off present indebtedness, put it on a proper running basis and put something in bank for emergencies. A committee was formed to make a canvass, the committee being composed of Mrs. Willison, Mrs. Loraditch, Mrs. Paul Naylor and Mrs. Frank Rathbun.

Mrs. Willison, with Mrs. Lawrence Fraley's assistance, reports:

CONSOLIDATION OF OLD TRAILS ROADS BOOSTED

Carrying Out of Plan Would Mean One Route From Baltimore to Los Angeles.

A plan for the consolidation of the National Old Trails Association of Kansas City, Mo., and the National Highway Booster Association of Maryland, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, was discussed and adopted tentatively at a meeting of representatives of the two associations held in Dayton, Ohio, recently, which was attended by representatives of the Association from this section and by the secretary of the Uniontown Chamber of Commerce. The final action on the plan for consolidation, however, will be taken at meetings of the two associations to be held between now and January 1st.

The plan as set forth at Dayton calls for the division of the highway system into four divisions extending from the Eastern seaboard to the Pacific coast, with terminals at Baltimore and Los Angeles. The National Old Trails road is perhaps the most famous in the United States and from the Eastern seaboard to St. Louis consists of the old Cumberland Trail and the National Pike, while from St. Louis westward it consists of the Boon's Lick Trail, the old Sante Fe trail and old Spanish trails extending to Los Angeles. Passing through 12 states, the highway presents a vast opportunity to an organization for the bringing of tourists into those states which it traverses and by means of a consolidated organization, national in scope, those interested in boosting the highway feel that better results can be obtained.

The local division of the highway will consist of Ohio, West Virginia, Pennsylvania and Maryland with a headquarters at a suitable point in either of the four states. In controlling the work of the association it is planned to have the president and secretary of the national organization and two vice-presidents from each state form a board of directors, while the president and representatives from each of the four divisions will form an executive committee. It is planned to have national headquarters located in Kansas City, where the National Old Trails Association, which was formed in 1912 and is the older of the two organizations, now has its headquarters.

The plan of financing the national organization has not yet been completed and Judge Harry S. Truman, president of the older organization, was authorized to work out a plan and submit it for approval to both groups at their meetings later. It is figured however, that on the basis of $5 a year for national membership, reliable hotels, restaurants, garages and other business places along the highway will become members and thus entitled to display the highway association insigna. These places will be thoroughly examined before being permitted to become members in order that all firms may have reliable backing in the association.

Among the activities of the association will be to issue courtesy cards to all tourists using the highway, to put up direction signs in all towns through which it passes and the many other necessities which may be required to make the National Highway the most popular road by which tourists may travel during the touring seasons.

Inter-City Rotarians Meet Here.

The second inter-city meeting of Rotary Clubs of Kingwood, Oakland and Terra Alta, was held at the William-James Hotel in Oakland, Friday evening of last week at which seventy-five Rotarians from the three towns sat down to a splendid dinner. The evening's program, which had been arranged by the entertainment committe of the local club, was carried out to perfection. Addresses were made by Bill Cramer, of Cumberland, and Frank Rathbun, of Oakland. The speech of the latter was splendidly delivered in the genuine Rotary spirit and conveyed Rotary thoughts of the highest degree. Bill Gibson, the pianist of the local club, proved himself to be a reader of ability as well as a musician. Walter Dawson was toastmaster and handled his part of the program to perfection. The final address was made by President Henry McComas, who also welcomed the visitors in a short address. The next inter-city meeting will be held in December at Kingwood.

KITZMILLER DECLAIMER IS WINNER OF FRALEY PRIZE

Miss Louise Browning The Successful Contestant, She Being a Senior of High School.

The Fraley Declamation Contest, in which girl students of the five high schools of the county—Kitzmiller, Accident, Grantsville, Friendsville and Oakland—participated, was won last night by Miss Louise Browning, a senior of the Kitzmiller school.

The contest, which was held at Kitzmiller, was said to be the most interesting and best since the inauguration of prize giving in such assemblages was inaugurated in Garrett county five years ago, the prizes being sponsored by Mr. G. A. Fraley, cashier, and financed by the Garrett National Bank of Oakland. A like contest for boy students of the county high schools, sponsored by Mr. W. W. Dawson of the First National Bank of Oakland, will occur later in the school year.

The contest last night was attended by a large crowd of people from all parts of the county who were enthusiastic and gave their favorite contestants loyal support. School Commissioners John O. Thayer and Robert L. Wilson, County Superintendent F. E. Rathbun and the principals of the high schools of the county, E. E. English, of Friendsville; R. R. Webster, of Grantsville; W. H. Miller, of Accident; Miss Katherine Conley, of Oakland, and E. C. Ryall, of Kitzmiller, were all in attendance, Mr. Rathbun presiding and presenting the contestants, who were: Miss Louise Browning, Kitzmiller, in "How the Larue Stakes Were Lost"; Miss Alverta Dillon, of Accident, in "A Perfect Tribute"; Miss Dorothy Edwards, Grantsville, in "The Wheels of Time," and who was awarded second place; Miss Amy Friend, Friendsville, in "Bobby Unwelcome," and Miss Teresa Kendall, Oakland, who also presented "How the Larue Stakes Were Lost," and who was given third place in the contest by the judges, the latter being all educators of Keyser, West Va., Messrs. J. C. Sanders, superintendent of schools; A. G. Springer, principal Keyser high school, and C. P. Anson, an instructor in the Keyser school.

Shipment of Live Stock to the University of West Virginia

Mr. Payton A. Dixon, of Garrett county, who is extensively engaged in raising live stock on his farm in District No. 8, recently shipped from Bayard seventeen head of select Aberdeen-Angus calves which he had previously sold to the Animal Husbandry Department of the West Virginia Experiment Station at Morgantown. There were several show prospects in the shipment and the representative of the University stated that they would be fitted for the fair circuit next year and that they would also enter them in the International Live Stock show in Chicago. These calves were sold for a fancy price and indicates that Garrett county is no longer marching in the rear rank as a producer of improved live stock.

RECALLS INAUGURAL OF FIRST W. VA. GOVERNOR

Mrs. Mattie Herrmans Recounts Pre-War Experiences.

Two out of the five men who were leaders in the movement to create a separate State out of Virginia, were from Preston county, and their activity is recalled by Mrs. Sarah Martha Herrmans, 83 years old, and now living in Morgantown, West Va.

Mrs. Herrmans, who resides in South Park, Morgantown, saw the first governor of West Virginia, Arthur I. Boarman, inaugurated in 1863. She was formerly Miss Mattie McGrew, and her father, James C. McGrew, was one of the prime movers in the attempt to form a new State separate from that portion of Virginia east of the Alleghenies. Her husband, the late Francis Herrmans, was a member of the first legislature of the State and helped codify the laws which are still in effect. In addition to her reflections upon the first inauguration, Mrs. Herrmans launched upon a reminiscence of the crucial days which led up to the founding of West Virginia as such, and of the vital part it played in the personal life of her family.

"Five men from the west of the mountains met in the Spotswood Hotel at Richmond and made a solemn pact that they would return to their homes and initiate a movement which would lead to the creation of a separate State. Taxes were high in what is now West Virginia, and the government of Virginia gave but little toward the upkeep of the State.. We could have slaves, since we were in a slave State, but they were hard to keep, due to the natural roughness of the country and because of the fact that they could reach Pennsylvania so easily and be safe from masters who might go in search of them. About the only thing the government of Virginia had done for its western portion was to furnish the insane asylum at Weston. Outide of that, the people were getting but little in return for their taxes, which were little less than exorbitant.

"The five men were Waitman T. Weilley, of Morgantown; William G. Brown, Sr., of Kingwood; Daniel Lamb, of Wheeling; Peter G. VanWinkle, of Martinsburg, and my father, James C. McGrew, of Kingwood. They returned home and launched their campaign. Later when the Civil War had been started and rebel raids had begun to trickle through this section of country, a special price was set on the heads of the leaders of the secession movement. I was then only a little girl, but I can distinctly remember how my father stood ready at the slightest warning to flee for his life."

The Biggest Parade.

"The biggest parade ever held in Maryland will start from Baltimore the day after Thanksgiving and will touch every clime and hamlet in Maryland." said Mrs. C. Milton Sincell, Seal Sale Chairman of Garrett county. "The parade will be 473 miles in length—almose long enough to encircle the State! It will be made up of thirty million little 'life savers' or little couriers of health—each spreading the message of 'Health for All; all for Health.'"

Thirty million 1926 Tuberculosis Christmas Seals; here, there, everywhere! Asking you to buy them, one penny each, so that tuberculosis and disease in Maryland may be further decreased. These little Christmas Seals have been running about the country around Thanksgiving and Christmas time for twenty-two years and have been influential in reducing the death rate from tuberculosis more than fifty per cent.

These little messengers of hope are now locked up in the offices of the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, at 900 Saint Paul Street, Baltimore. They are raring to go and will be released on Thanksgiving Day, November twenty-fifth.

The Pastor's Aid Society of St. Mark's Lutheran church will hold its annual bazaar and food sale on Saturday, December 4th, beginning at ten o'clock in the morning and continuing all day, in the store of Mr. F. A. Smouse on Second street. Fancy articles of all kinds suitable for holiday gifts, bread, rolls, cake, pies, etc., will be on sale and the patronage of the public is solictied.

Mr. George Beckman, a prominent farmer of the Glade section north of Swanton, is lying critically ill at his home with tuberculosis, he having fallen a veitim to the ravages of this disease about two years ago.

Maryland Leads in Forest Education.

"The State Department of Forestry in Maryland is leading a way in forestry education that will have a tremendous effect on the next generation," said Charles Lathrop Pack, President of the American Tree Association today. "As a feeder to American Forest Week April 24, Maryland has in her Junior Forester campaign a plan that should be worked out in every state," Mr. Pack continued.

The American Tree Association has put almost 10,000 Forestry Primers into the state through F. W. Besley, the State forester, and the school teachers of the state. This plain phrased booklet on the forestry situation was published by the American Tree Association to mark 1926 the semi-centennial of the first step in forestry by the U. S. Government. The publication has now reached 700,000 copies, so great has been the demand from educators.

Today a consignment of the Primers was sent to J. Frederick Virgin at Elkton. Cecil county is the experimental ground for the Junior Forester movement and Forester Virgin says the boys are taking to the idea in fine fashion. He adds, "the most popular pamphlet going to the boys is the Forestry Primer."

"According to the Maryland plan," continued Mr. Pack, "the Junior Forester must be 12 years old, have a fair standing in school, familiarize himself with the forest laws of his state, know among other things the native trees and the telephone number of two fire wardens. This is an admirable ground work.

"The American people must beeome forestry minded and the place to begin is where Maryland is beginning. That place is the objective of the Forestry Primer. W. B. Greeley, the Chief of the U. S. Forest Service, told the foresters the other day, the boys in France knew forestry as few boys in the world. The American boy must know the economic value of forests and the Maryland boy surely will as a result of what the State Forestry Department is doing. I hope every boy in the state earns the Junior Forester badge."

According to reports to the American Tree Association, the semi-centennial year is the biggest in an educational way the country ever saw. California, Louisiana and Minnesota have just voted to permit amendments to the state constitutions so fotest land may be relieved from undue taxation until there is a forest crop. In 1928 Pennsylvania will vote on a bond issue for forestry.

DRY RUN

The farmers of this community have about completed all their fall work. Most all of them report good crops of apples and potatoes.

The new road to J. W. Green's is nearing completion, the same being on a good grade and will be appreciated by everyone in this part of the county very much.

Mr. Delbert Broadwater had somewhat of an accident the other day when the steering gear of his car became locked at a point near the T. R. Murphy farm. Mr. Broadwater succeeded in bringing the car to a stop before it turned over, Had it not been for his presence of mind in this emergency it is probable that the machine would have been wrecked and serious injury sustained by the occupant.

Mr. B. F. Broadwater is having some of his farm buildings repaired following the damage they sustained by a storm which passed through this section a few weeks ago.

Mr. John Gasper has accepted the position as foreman of the Sheffield Lumber Company at Sheffield, Pa., and is expecting to move with his family to that place in the near future.

Dayton Murphy and Walter Hall, of this community, have gone to Johnstown, Pa., in search of employment.

Glen Murphy was calling on friends in Keyser a few days last week.

Mr. Della Broadwater and Miss Welchouse made a trip to Baltimore one day last week in Mr. Broadwater's new car.

Everyone should subscribe for The Republican and get all the news.

NOTICE TO TRESPASSERS.

All persons found trespassing upon the Perine Lands, lying north and west of Oakland, especially those persons with gun and dog, will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

MORE LAWS COMING.

Now that the election is over and the issues and the fortunes of the various candidates have been settled for the next two yers, there is about to come to us again the season of lawmaking. Soon Congress will be in session, and then will come the meetings of the various legislatures, all anxious to get the old legislative hopper ready to grind out laws by the hundred, laws for the regulation of the people and their business, and laws which a great many of us unfortunately will prepare to dodge whenever possible.

For the season of lawmaking always follows the election. Some of the experts on the subject are now predicting that at least 15,000 new laws will be made for the American people within the next few months—15,000 new laws to be added to the statutes which we now seem to be unuable to enforce.

This number may seem to be tremendous, but it may turn out that it is a conservative guess. In addition to our Congress there will be about forty legislatures in session. These lawmaking bodies turned out in the neighborhood of 14,000 laws two years ago and there seems to be no reason why they will not exceed this record in the coming year.

Just why we have to have so many new laws nobody seems to know. It would seem that legislators have a sort of mania for turning out new laws. They make the best sort of resolutions about fighting all unnecessary legislation, but when the boys get together down at the state capital a veritable epidemic of law-making always breaks loose.

Sometime perhaps the realization will come to us generally that what we need is not new laws but a better enforcement of the laws already on the statute books with the repeal of those which are found obnoxious in the enforcement. True, the editorial writers in the newspapers point out these facts occasionally even now, but nobody seems to be able to do anything about it. So until there is a change doubtless we will continue to pile up new laws with the result that we shall increase the number of lawbreakers and throw the law as a general proposition still further into public contempt.

AMERICANS SHOULD BE GRATEFUL.

At this season of the year when the American people are accustomed to look back for twelve months to recount their blessings for the year, an article by Secretary of the Interior Work, given to the pres a few days ago, is applicable, as in it some of the blessisgs for which the American people should be grateful are cited.

"The economic welfare of every nation is dependent almost entirely on the progressive spirit of its people," says Mr. Work. "No statecraft can create wealth; no government thru the mere enactment of law can give prosperity to people who are unwilling to work to attain it.

"A government, however, can adopt sound national policies and through their wise administration promote the material well-being of its people. It can protect its industries from foreign competition; it can stimulate trade and commerce within and without its boundaries of its natural resources by its own citizens.

"I know of no nation on earth where these principles of political economy have been so successfully applied as in the United States. By the adoption as the first act of our first federal congress of a protective tariff policy to prevent the influx of commodities produced hy cheap labor abroad at ruinously low prices, this country has become the greatest manufacturing nation in the world. The benevolent effects of this national policy are too well known to warrant further discussion. In the expansion of domestic and foreign trade our government has always been an active agency.

"But it is the development of its natural resources that this nation has established a record unparalleled in history. To the indomitable spirit of our people belongs in a great part the credit for this amazing accomplishment. The hardy pioneer with his energy and perseverence transformed the wilderness. He cleared the forests and settled the lands. He dug into the ground for minerals and developed them. He built transcontinental railroads, bringing civilization in their wake and wiping out the last vestge of the frontier."

A BELATED BURIAL OF BIGOTRY

A few days ago the newspapers gave conspicuous publicity to a dispatch from Port Huron, Michigan, giving an account of the raising of "a flag of tolerance" in that city. The flag was donated by the Port Huron Ku Klux Klan to a Methodist church, whose pastor, Rev. Dr. Russell, H. Brendy, had been an open foe of the Klan. The mast from which the flag floated was given by a prominent Port Huron Jew. The flag was raised by a negro war veteran and the dedicatory adudress was made by Right Rev. Monsignor Dunigan, a Catholic priest. In his address Monsignor Dunigan said:

"This observance, with its diversity of elements assembled so obviously for the common good, means nothing if not the convincing burial of the bitterness of bigotry in this county. It should stand as a splendid examnle to all communities."

Let us hope the priest is right—that bigotry, at least as a serious menace to the peace and happiness of communities, is dead and buried in Port Huron, if not everywhere. But it was certainly a belated funeral.

The exercises at Port Huron were very edifying and every lover of the liberal, reasonable, common sense way of living will rejoice at this unusual flag raising ceremonial. And yet isn't it strange that at this late day such rejoicing should be called for in any part of the United States. Why, after a hundred and fifty years of living under the American constitution should any section of our people feel called upon to have ceremonies stressing liberty of conscience and freedom from hate because of religious beliefs, the place of one's birth, or the color of one's skin? Since it is a fact that we have had so much evidence of bitter and crazy bigotry in the past few years it is well to see a flag of tolerance go up where bigotry has been most conspicuous. But the incident should serve as a warning as well as a cause for reasonable people to rejoice. It should be a warning that if the despicable thing is dead it ought not be permitted to come to life again. Back of every wave of bigotry the country has had there has been a seeking of material profits by mercenary creatures who were able to play their salesmanship tricks on the emotions of the suspicious, the gullible and the uninformed.

The history of the organization known as the Ku Klux Klan, in this community, by the testimony of its former members, is proof of that.

No decent person wants to profit by bigotry or by inspiring hate, and no mercenary creature, indecent enough to engage in such practices, should be permitted to profit by them. Let sane people kill the possibility of profit by bigotry and bigotry will stay buried.

DUNCAN LINDLEY SLOAN

Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals of Maryland.

(From The Marylander)

An honored son of an honored family, of Scotch descent, Mr. Sloan, although yet in early middle life, has, for several years taken rank, not only as one of the best lawyers in Western Maryland, but also as one of the very best lawyers in the State. In fact he had attained such an excellent reputation at the bar more than fifteen years ago that he was nominated for the position of Chief Judge of the Circuit Court and only the great personal popularity of his opponent, combined with a very extensive, Statewide organization of corporate, financial and political influence, enabled his adversaries to overcome the usual large majority of his party, and thus he suffered defeat where there should have been an easy victory. As it was, notwithstanding the almost superhuman work that was done in order to prevent his election, he only lost out by a very small margin, and suffered no loss of personal, professional or political prestige as a result of the fight.

Mr. Sloan's reputation as a man of more than ordinary ability is not confined to his standing as one of the leaders of his profession and as a really learned and able lawyer. He takes rank, whereever known, as a business man of more than average capacity and no man in his section of the State has a greater knowledge of the intricate laws and cusoms governing all sorts of financial transactions. His knowledge of banking and all sorts of laws governing ordinary, and extraordinary commercial transactions, is second to that of no one in the Western Maryland circuit, and he is also learned in the corporation laws not only of Maryland, but also of the other States where their laws come in contact with interests of Marylanders and Maryland corporations. In fact, Mr. Sloan is what is now termed a first-class, all-around lawyer—one of the kind that is usually found in the smaller cities and larger towns of the United States—all of whom are in certain degree specialists in their profession.

No man in Cumberland stands higher as a citizen and gentleman than the subject of this sketch. In fact all the Sloans of Allegany county, and they form a large collection, have taken rank among the best and most praiseworthy members of the community. They have been, and some of them still are, lawyers, bankers, manufacturers, merchants and miners, and all have proved, in the past, worthy of every trust reposed in them and the present generation of that fine old Scotch family is showing no sign of decay or degeneration in any way whatever. They are still bankers and lawyers, merchants and miners—and no stain has ever attached to any of them either in the past or in the present generation. And it is notable, in this connection to state, that one of the ablest judges who ever presided over any of the courts of Maryland was the late Judge David Sloan, a cousin of the subject of this sketch, who was noted in his time as one of the really great lawyers of the commonwealth, and who died more than a quarter of a century ago.

The writer has known Lindley Sloan ever since he became a member of the bar. His honored father, James M. Sloan, was State Senator from Allegany thirty years ago. He was later an assistant treasurer of the United States, and is now president of a bank at Lonaconing, and his long career, both as a public official and private citizen is a crown to him in his declining years and a source of pride to his family. And, it is one of the greatest causes of satisfaction to the writer to be able to say that one of the most cherished friendships in his long life has been that with James M. Sloan—for thirty-five years it has lasted without a misunderstanding or a jar.

And Lindley Sloan is a worthy son of his honored sire. He has won his spurs in his profession. He has hown up well in every act of life. And now that he has been raised to the bench of the highest court he will perform all the duties which may be incumbent on him, with credit to himself, his family and his people.

In some of the election precincts it is said that the election board had looking glasses placed in some of the polling places and it took most of the women twice as long as usual to vote.

DIED.

MISS MARION C. HOYE.

Miss Marion C. Hoye, daughter of the late Edward and Marion Hauser Hoye, died at her home in Oakland last Friday afternoon at two o'clock of dropsy and a complication of diseases. Miss Hoye was aged 75 years and was the sole survivor of the family. Her funeral took place from the home where she died Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, being conducted by Rev. C. A. Shilke, pastor of the Oakland Lutheran church. Miss Hoye during her lifetime was a member of the Presbyterian church. Interment was made in the Oakland cemetery.

MRS. IDA R. BENDER.

Mrs. Ida R. Bender, wife of Jacob J. Bender, a prominent merchant of Grantsville, Garrett county, died at the residence of her sister, Mrs. William Maddox, in Pomona, California, last Thursday morning, after an illness of two weeks of pneumonia and complications. Until a short time preceding her death Mrs. Bender was thought to be recovering from her painful illness. Mrs. Bender was well and quite favorably known throughout Garrett and Allegany counties by her connection in Sunday school and church work, having occupied a position of importane for several years in the State and County Sunday School Associations. She was a life-long, consistent and highly esteemed member of the Lutheran church, having been confirmed as such when still quite young at her home in Frostburg and following her marriage she allied herself with the Lutheran church at Grantsville. For her many kindnesses, hospitality and ever open handed charity, her geniality and the Christian spirit displayed upon every occasion, Mrs. Bender was loved by all with whom she came in contact. Her passing will leave a void in the family, the church and the home circle. Mrs. Bender's solicitude for the health of her step-sons, Clyde and Otto Bender, sent her to California early in October to spend the winter in the hope that the change of climate would be beneficial to their health. The deceased lady was forty-four years of age and was the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Gantt, of Frostburg, Md. She is survived by her husband, four step-sons, Allen J., Harry, Otto and Clyde Bender; one step-daughter, Mrs. Charles O. Keller, also of Grantsville, and by four brothers, William Gantt. Baltimore; Charles and Ralph Gantt, Cumberland, Walter Gantt, Pittsburgh; also by the following sisters: Mrs. Rudolph Reinheimer and Mrs. Frederick Warr, Pittsburgh; Mrs. R. J. Payne, Cumberland; Mrs. Elkins Goshorn, Piedmont, W. Va., and Mrs. William Maddox, of Pomona, Cal., at whose home she died. Funeral arrangements will not be completed until the date of the arrival of Mrs. Bender's remains is ascertained. Interment will be made at Grantsville.

A Tribute to the Memory of Mrs. Bender by Sara R. Getty.

In the death of Ida Rebecka Bender, of Grantsville, the village has sustained a real loss both in the civic and church work, and also as a true neighbor and friend, the writer having been privileged to call her friend through many years of uninterrupted affection.

As a friend her first thought was of service to those whom she loved, as a neighbor she was ready at all times to help those in need, as a church worker she will be greatly missed as, in the choir, in the Sunday school, in the county Young Peoples' work and in the missionary society, where she held the office of president for years, her work was of real importance and will be missed.

As a homemaker she reigned supreme, no matter how great her outside interests, she was always ready to make home attractive and pleasant.

Having no children of her own, she took to heart the family of her husband with such love and affection that her children can truly call her blessed, her last act being one of solicitude and love for the younger boys whom she took to California that their health might be improved. As a wife she was a real help-mate, always ready to advise, sympathize, and help her husband in his work.

Abruptly, tragically her work was brought to a close but the memory of her life of usefulness will remain to help and inspire and come with a touch of healing to those who are left behind.

The CALORIC HEATS THEM ALL

Homes, stores, churches, factories—all over the country—are being heated more comfortably and at less cost with the Caloric pipeless furnace.

The Caloric delivers practically 100% of the heat from the fuel directly into your rooms, and at the same time withdraws the cool air from the building. This establishes a natural air circulation, with the result that the building is heated more uniformly and fuel consumption is cut ⅓ to ½. There are now —in every state in the Union, in Canada, Alaska—and many in this locality.

OVER 135,000 CALORIC USERS

Here a word of warning. Caloric success has been so revolutionary that it has aroused opposition from those who profit from making and selling out-of-date heating systems. The result is that many imitation pipeless furnaces have been put out which are failures. Be not misled by these failures. Most of them were designed to be failures—and have been marketed in vain attempts to discredit the rapidly-growing Caloric idea.

Thanksgiving

Thank God for His favors,
Abundant and deep—
The days for our striving,
The nights for our sleep.

The treasures He gives us
All through the hours.
The gleam of the sunlight,
The perfume of flowers.

The song of the wildbirds
In spring's lovely ways,
The beauties and wonders
We see through the days.

The laughter of childhood,
The home hearth's bright glow,
The sweet ties of kinship,
Friends whom we know.

The harvest so bounteous
That grows in our field,
Filling our barns
With generous yield.

Thank God for His favors—
Today we bow low
And whisper our thanks
For the gifts that we know.

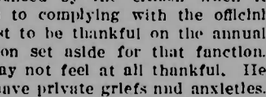
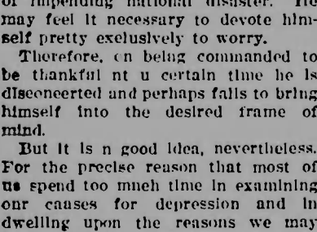
CUT OUT WORRIES AT THIS SEASON

Let Thanksgiving Time Be Given Over Only to Rejoicing.



A story which has been told in theatrical circles for many years, relates the adventure of a comedian, long out of a job, who, in fear and trembling, sought employment from a gruff and hard-visaged manager. On being informed of his visitor's errand, the manager wheeled in his chair, fixed the unfortunate actor with a baleful glare and barked out, "All right, go ahead and be comical now. Make me laugh."

Something akin to the discomfiture of the actor thus peremptorily required to be mirth provoking is often experienced by the citizen when it comes to complying with the official request to be thankful on the annual occasion set aside for that function. He may not feel at all thankful. He may have private griefs and anxieties. He may have domestic worries. He may be oppressed with a conviction of impending national disaster. He may feel it necessary to devote himself pretty exclusively to worry.

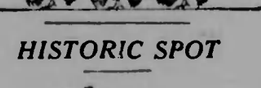


Therefore, on being commanded to be thankful at a certain time he is disconcerted and perhaps fails to bring himself into the desired frame of mind.

But it is a good idea, nevertheless. For the precise reason that most of us spend too much time in examining our causes for depression and in dwelling upon the reasons we may have for sorrow, regret or apprehension, it is an excellent thing to be asked at a certain time to remember our blessings.

For we all have them, however much we may permit them to be obscured by our worries. Individually and nationally we have much to be thankful for and a few moments of thought will disclose ample reason for gratitude.

HISTORIC SPOT



Monument marking the first landing place of the Pilgrims on Cape Cod.

Sarah Hale's Good Work

Sarah Josepha Hale, editor of Godey's Ladies' Book, began a campaign of propaganda for having a statute fixing the day for the Thanksgiving ceremony, and through her large influence and that of her magazine she caused so much agitation that in 1864 congress declared that the last Thursday of November should thereafter be a legal holiday.

Since then every President has issued the welcomed proclamation, and on the last Thursday of November the American people follow the advice of Governor Bradford of the early Plymouth colony and "after a special manner rejoice together."

HERE'S SOME PUNKIN'

Little "movie" favorite holds a pumpkin on top of her head just to show how big it is. And all of it for a great big pie for herself on Thanksgiving day.

List Blessings That Call for Gratitude

Thanksgiving is a mental condition, and is not dependent upon the state of one's finances or one's larder. In fact, people are more apt to forget God and His benefits to us when they are enjoying prosperity than in adversity. The well man or woman is not as prone to thank God for health as the sick man or woman to thank Him for returning strength.

Farmers may be thankful this year that they probably have seen the worst of their hard times. When so many people are without work and without homes, the farmer still has his chores and his farm on which to hibernate. Whatever our troubles are, they might be worse. Most of us get more than we deserve. If we could see a daily balance sheet of our credits and debits as our Master sees them, we would undoubtedly feel sincere gratitude for what we have been spared.—Exchange.

THANKSGIVING DAY

Come, uncles and cousins and wives and aunts;
Come, nephews and brothers, no won'ts, no can'ts;
Put business and shopping and school books away,
The year has rolled 'round, it is Thanksgiving day.

The table is spread and the dinner is dressed;
The cooks and the mothers have all done their best;
No caliph of Bagdad s'er saw such display,
Or dreamed of a treat like this Thanksgiving day.

Now children revisit the darling old place,
Now brothers and sisters long parted embrace;
The family ring is united once more,
And the same voices shout at the old cottage door.

The grandfather smiles on the innocent mirth,
And blesses the powers that have guarded his hearth;
His remembers no trouble, he feels no decay,
But thinks his whole life has been Thanksgiving day.

Then praise for the past and the present we'll sing,
And, trustful, await what the future may bring;
Let doubt and repining be vanished away,
And the whole of our lives be a Thanksgiving day.

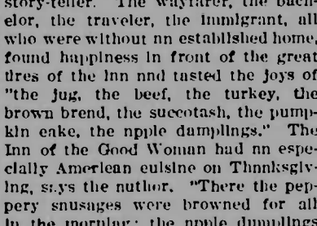
Thanksgiving Day in New England

Grandmother had no farther to go than the cellar or the turkey pen to obtain the material for her Thanksgiving spread.



But what about these luckless wights who had no ancestral farmhouse to which they might repair on Thanksgiving day? Were they left desolate? Not at all. The innkeeper to the rescue. It seems that the old inns along the rock-bound coasts fairly rivaled the homesteads in making merry on Thanksgiving. Hezekiah Butterworth gives us a picture of that hospitable ordinary, the Inn of the Good Woman, that stood in the east end of Boston in the early part of the Eighteenth century.

The sign of the inn was a picture of a woman without a head, the suggestion being that the head is a dispensable part of a truly good woman, and that silence and service became the landlady. It is said that the device set many a woman's tongue to wagging, that the sign became the topic during the dinner hour, and that it is probable the discussions led to the first woman's rights opinions formed in old Boston town. In describing the life at the Inn of the Good Woman, the author doubtless shows what was being enacted in many another old inn on Thanksgiving day. He says:

"The Inn of the Good Woman was famous for its humor and lively tales, and after-dinner stories on Thanksgiving days were a feature of the period of political expectancy. Thanksgiving was the Puritan Christmas, in Colonial times, the one day of merry-making and good cheer." After the morning sermon and the noon feast Thanksgiving afternoon and evening were seasons of social enjoyment, given over to musician, riddler and story-teller. The wayfarer, the bachelor, the traveler, the immigrant, all who were without an established home, found happiness in front of the great fires of the inn and tasted the joys of "the jug, the beef, the turkey, the brown bread, the succotash, the pumpkin cake, the apple dumplings." The Inn of the Good Woman had an especially American cuisine on Thanksgiving, says the author. "There the peppery sausages were browned for all in the morning; the apple dumplings with potato crusts and pandowdy were served as a dessert at noon, and the hot gingerbread with like liberality at the evening meal. There the best, the cleverest, the most thrilling of all the marvelous stories were told."

If one were a wayfarer, a bachelor, a traveler or an immigrant, and were permitted to take the trail of the yesterdays, would not one seek to join the company at the inn of the Good Woman this Thanksgiving day? Would one not feast upon the food of reason and the flow of soul, and in so doing is there one who would refuse a second helping of that pumpkin "cake" or pumpkin pie which the hostess offered? No; more likely one would, as one crunched the brown crusts and yellow meat, echo in silence the children's "Hurrah for the pumpkin pie!"

"I am, mister; you see I've been to three newsboys' dinners an' I'm 'fraid I can't git to the two others."

Early Proclamations

History records that in 1763 Halifax proclaimed a day of Thanksgiving to mark the peace that made Canada a British possession. Thirty-two years later, in 1795, Washington, first President of the United States, issued the first national Thanksgiving proclamation of that country. The day was more or less generally observed by a number of the States in succeeding years, and since President Lincoln's call for its observation in 1861, has grown in significance, and has attained standing as a national holiday in the Republic.

BRINGING HOME THE TURKEY

When father brought the turkey home—
You must remember that?
The thrills—the wild excitement, too—
From mother down to cat!
No circus day in all Youth's years,
No toy in Santa's pack,
Outrivaled Dad when he came home—
A gobbler on his back!

When father brought the turkey home—
I see him smiling now,
Though neighbors, knowing our estate,
Looked on and wondered how.
We children did not understand,
But, since, I've heard Dad say:
'Your mother joyed in sacrifice
To make Thanksgiving day!"

When father brought the turkey home—
Perplexities arose;
Where would we keep it? Mother said:
"The cellar, I suppose."
We made a prisoner of our prey,

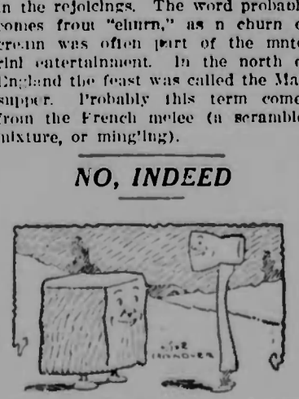
Put stones against the door,
Then spent a sleepless night in fear
We'd see him nevermore!

When father brought the turkey home—
Dear mother used to say:
"I need the wings to dust the hearth
And brush the crumbs away."
All other feathers would be ours,
For Indians abhor
To go unfeathered down the trail
When councilling for war!
—William Herschell, in the Indianapolis News.

Not Easy to Trace Ancestry of Turkey

There are some who claim that the turkey which gets such a prominent place at Thanksgiving time, came from Mexico. Both the Mexican wild bird and our barnyard turkey have a creamy white on the tips of the tail feathers and on the feathers overlying the base of the tail. The wild turkey of the East is a decided chestnut brown. Very often a domesticated bird will appear very like its Mexican granddad, several times removed, except for a greater development of the fatty lobes of head and neck.

There are others who tell us that when the Spaniards made their conquest of Mexico they found at Montezuma a fine zoological garden. In it were nearly all the native birds and animals, with many gathered from afar. Strutting about were the ancestors of our domestic turkey. The zoo birds were domesticated. In the outlying country there were many wild brothers and sisters of these birds. Before the first quarter of a century was over some of the domestic birds had been transplanted to the West Indies and the Spanish main, where they were kept by colonists. By 1540 the turkey had made its way to England, and 30 years later was in high favor as the Christmas dish of the English farmer.



Harvest Home Feasts Old English Custom

Harvest-home, harvest-home,
We have ploughed, we have sowed,
We have reaped, we have mowed,
We have brought home every load,
Hip, hip, hip, harvest-home!

Nowadays the last day of "carrying the corn" is not marked by such hearty rejoicing and feasting as formerly. Most of the old harvest customs have been allowed to drop. In many parts of England, Harvest Home was the name given to the festival celebrated in honor of the corn-gathering. In Scotland the term was Kirn. Kirn-supper was the name given to the meal, which was the principal item in the rejoicings. The word probably comes from "churn," as a churn of cream was often part of the material entertainment. In the north of England the feast was called the Mell supper. Probably this term comes from the French melee (a scramble, mixture, or mingling).

KING OF THE FEAST

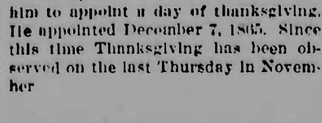
TIME TO ENUMERATE NATION'S BLESSINGS

Americans Have Every Reason to Give Thanks to the Creator.

It is in order at Thanksgiving time to pause to take account of the reasons why the nation should give thanks for blessings, in response to the President's proclamation. No perfunctory feeling of gratitude is adequate. The people of America should thoughtfully consider the circumstances of their life, the bounties they are enjoying, the opportunities they find in daily lives to advance and to justify themselves as members of society.

Yet enumeration of the blessings that have been bestowed upon us as a people is a trite recital at best. They are well known, often related. They are evident in the daily goings and comings of all the people. They are part of the very atmosphere of everyday existence. Prosperity, employment, security from aggression, a free choice of occupation, the chance for every man to rise to higher pinnes of social and business activity, a sound government based upon the highest principles of "self-determination," the administration of affairs intrusted to citizens of integrity and capacity—such are the fundamentals of American life.

To appreciate the blessings of American citizenship, especially in these times, it is but necessary to glance abroad, to other lands, where conditions are far less favorable to happiness and social development. Though scarred by the war, through the loss of a multitude of men, America has received no deep wounds. Prosperity prevails in all sections, among all classes of the people. Elsewhere this tale cannot be told. No grave anxieties beset this land. The prospect is fair, undimmed by clouds of doubt or fear.



A strong, healthy people, thrifty and happy, aspirant for learning, eager for service, gifted with the richest bounties of nature! Americans have indeed occasion to give thanks on this day, fervently and reverently, for their blessings.

Cartloads of pumpkins as yellow as gold,
Onions in silvery strings,
Shining red apples and clusters of grapes,
Nuts and a host of good things,
Chickens and turkeys, and fat little pigs—
These are what Thanksgiving brings.

Work is forgotten and playtime begins,
From office and schoolroom and hall,
Fathers and mothers and uncles and aunts,
Nieces and nephews and all
Speed away home as they hear from afar
The voice of old Thanksgiving call.

Now is the time to forget all your cares,
Cast every trouble away,
Think of your blessings, remember your joys,
Don't be afraid to be gay!
None are too old, and none are too young,
To frolic on Thanksgiving day.

December Thanksgiving

In 1865 Thanksgiving was celebrated December 7. Previous to 1864, the time of Thanksgiving day had varied often. In 1864 President Lincoln ordered a day of thanksgiving, the sixth of August, on account of the battle of Gettysburg, and again ordered a day of thanksgiving on the twenty-sixth of November of the same year. In 1865, after the death of Lincoln, no proclamation was made until a special delegation from the First Congregational church of Washington waited upon President Johnson to ask him to appoint a day of thanksgiving. He appointed December 7, 1865. Since this time Thanksgiving has been observed on the last Thursday in November

THANKSGIVING

I'm thankful for the sunshine, and
I'm thankful for the showers.
I'm thankful for December's snows, and thankful for May's flowers.
When I get up each morning, I'm as happy as can be;
And when I go to bed at night, this world looks good to me!
And on the day that's set apart for folks to hold Thanksgiving
I celebrate with all my heart, because I'm glad I'm living!

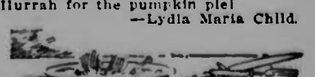
True Gratitude Goes Along With Humility

The giving of thanks implies two things—that there are things to be thankful for, and that there is a "Giver of every good and perfect gift" to whom the thanks are directed. It has been said that ingratitude is one of the basest of sins, as of course it is, and also that it is one of the commonest. Yet it is natural for men and women to be thankful, and few there are who have not some things for which to be thankful—perhaps many of them. This day is usually devoted to a consideration of material blessings—that is, when it is not given over to a discussion of issues and problems, sometimes helpful, but often not.

Material blessings are by no means to be despised. Indeed they are not to be despised at all. If men were properly grateful for them—grateful as the ancient Hebrews were bidden to be by Moses—there would be no pride of wealth and no selfish use of it, or glorying in it. Against all this, the truly thankful spirit, with its sense of dependence on a higher power, is the surest antidote. There is a certain humility in true gratitude—a sort of feeling that one has had more, perhaps much more, than one's deserts. That indeed is usually the case. So it is that out of material blessings may be born great spiritual strength.

TO PILGRIM FATHERS

A view of the Pilgrim Fathers' Memorial, unveiled at the Humber river, England, near Immingham creek, in honor of the party which left this very spot and sailed on September 6, 1620, from Southampton in the "Mayflower" to America, in search of religious freedom. Atop this shaft is a piece of stone from the famous Plymouth rock on which the voyagers landed when they arrived here. American, English and Dutch notables attended the unveiling.



Significance of Day of Thanks Unchanged

The idea of giving thanks for blessings and remembering our mercies is a noble one, for ingratitude in man or in nation grows into a sin. The significance of the day may have changed. A bountiful harvest to the pinched and troubled Pilgrims on their strip of barren land was, in every way, a blessing. To the modern farmer "a bumper crop" may mean low prices and gluts which do anything but bless him. We know of one family in which the representatives of 40 years ago conducted a dairy farm with only their own strength and that of a yoke of cattle. Today the present working generation on the dairy farm uses a tractor, a milking machine, a car, a truck, power for sawing and grinding—a telephone and a radio or at least six separate engines. This is typical of many modern farms and yet probably the older generation felt that they had more to be thankful for! But, anyway, no matter where we live and what our circumstances may be, we all have much to be thankful for. On this Thanksgiving day let us forget our troubles and remember our mercies!—Rural New Yorker.

Over the river and through the wood,
To grandfather's house we go;
The horse knows the way
To carry the sleigh
Through the white and drifted snow.

Over the river and through the wood—
Now grandmother's cap I spy!
Hurrah for the fun!
Is the pudding done?
Hurrah for the pumpkin pie!

COLONIAL ISRAEL.

America's history is well known, and the difficulties they faced as Colonists upon unfriendly shores form one of its heroic pages. There were thirteen isolated units, unrelated except in sympathy, fringing the eastern border and gradually extending their sway over more and more territory. They were faced by new conditions as well as by fighting Indians whose forays decimated many a village and spread terror over large regions of territory. Individual leaders like Boone led in the defense that was sometimes at one point of peril and sometimes in an entirely different section or territory. He who would understand the period of the Judges where every man did what was right in his own eyes must read our own Colonial days. For Israel planted 13 colonies in new quarters beginning upon the East, had no central government, but the tribes were linked in the same way that the Colonies united, through sympathy and under pressure of need. Individuals rose here and there to meet some particular crisis and fought with what followers they could gain in the desperate forays that ultimately determined the ownership of the land. They were the Judges, Ehud, Deborah, Barek and the rest, who were all individualists and each touched only a small portion of the whole territory, but gained his notoriety by shrewdness and resourcefulness in the face of danger. It was a pioneer situation easily understood in the light of our own experience.

Gideon was in Ephriam, a farm boy who had become a small landowner and head of a family, for he had a boy, Jether, perhaps 16 years of age, The Midianites had been finding it much easier to steal barley than to plant and cultivate it so that each returning harvest found them covering the land through the rich plain of Aesdralon and extending their raids up farther within the adjacent district each season. Gideon was threshing where the chaff would not lift its tell-tale dust as a beacon to guide the raiders when some messenger of God brought him his call to the leadership of Israel for the driving out of the invaders. He accepted the call as God's will and set about his task.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

If he would lead the people in God's path there must be no divided allegiance at home. What he did not dare to do himself he could not ask others to do. Slowly the purpose formed within his mind and after all were asleep he slipped about softly enough and woke ten of his servants, gave them axes and led them up the hill to the High Place outside the town. Very swiftly they worked, for death lurked in the discovery, but at dawn the old altar had been demolished, the chips of the pillar arranged for firing upon a new stone sructure, the sacrifice was ready for the flame. As the men came out of their houses with the sun and turned their expectant faces toward the summit for their morning adoration, blank amazement stilled them and then startled them into an angry shout as they rushed the hillside. Soon they marched to the house of Joash and demanded his boy. But the stalwart old farmer barred the door. "If your god could not defend himself why should you bother to do it?" was his query. And as Gideon, Jether and the axemen stood ready for any challenge. There was swift cooling of desire to vindicate Baal, and the invitation of Joash to worship Jehovah fell upon willing ears. And as it was his ox there were ready stomachs to take the festal, sacrificial feast, so the work was done and the converts accepted the new leadership that was ready to fight or feed and pay the price in both cases. It had been a daring thing to do, but it had been the only possible way for real advance. Charity as well as religion must begin at home though woe betide it if it stop there.

PREPARING FOR BATTLE.

There must be immediate action, for Midian was at the door with a great host of raiders that scattered in all directions from their central camp. Gideon called together those who would volunteer, but put the searching test of a fearful heart. Of course no one was afraid, but one's crop was out, another's wife wasn't well, the third's grandmother must be buried—each one had the best of excuses for deserting except Jether, who plead passionately for his father not to send him back with the men. Then on a hot harvest day Gideon led them on a sweaty march down the hill to the spring and stream that lay in full view of the enemy. My! how hot they were dying for a drink and they did not care anything about Midianites anyway. One good Israelite was worth a dozen of them. But some stood and flung water from their cupped hands toward their mouths, lapping it in with ready tongue. And when they reached the top of the hill and the trumpet called them together Gideon ordered all those who had drunk standing to fall out by themselves. There were three hundred of them, and one can imagine Gideon's joy as he saw his boy Jether among them. And it was this little group that he chose for the surprise attack at night.

THE VICTORY.

God's call but Gideon's planning marks the way Jehovah always works. He wants us but we must use our own wits. Having settled the temper of those with whom he would strike his blow he would discover that of the enemy. He tried the fleece to discover if the night would be clear or with air mist-filled, for he must have as deep darkness as possible if his surprise would work. Then he daringly crept to the tents that he might feel out their mind. All things being to his liking he prepared to launch the attack. His men were distributed, one hundred on each flank and another in front of the camp, leaving only the road home unguarded. At the change of the watch there came the crash of pitchers, the flare of the torches on three different sides of them and the terrific yell that roused them from sleep and sent them in a panic rushing along the valley. Death stalked after them, crossed the river and followed them to their far-distant camp where a second surprise scattered them completely and left their leaders in the hands of Gideon to taste the penalty of blood revenge for the slaying of his brothers. And the boy Jether was along, "faint, yet pursuing," with the best of them. It was a great day for the boy as well as for Israel.

Metallurgist Explains Dependability

What gives a motor car dependability, endurance and long life?

According to the chief metallurgist of the largest mill that supplies alloy steels to motor car builders, the cars that have earned the best reputations for dependability, endurance and long life, under such rough, hard service army and to explorers far beyond civilization's frontiers, owe their good names to the shock-and-wear-resisting properties of the heat treated alloy steels in their vital parts.

Avoiding the scientific and technical terms of the metallurgist and engineer, he explained to the automobile owner and buyer why the alloy steels are used for the vital parts of the good motor car or truck.

There are two fundamental requirements to long life in motor ears, this expert brought out:

"First, the steel selected for a given part must have the proper composition or chemical analysis for that part. Second, it must be properly heat treated to develop the correct degree of hardness, strength and shock-resisting ability.

"Of these two desired qualities the most important to safety is ability to resist shock, and it is in this characteristic that the proper alloy steel is so far superior to any carbon steel.

"Correct composition and correct heat treatment play the same part in the production of the vital parts of an automobile that the proper proportioning of ingredients, proper mixing and proper baking play in the making of bread, rolls and pastry.

"It is no more possible to make from cheap carbon steel a steering knuckle, steering connection, axle shaft or exhaust valve that possesses maximum safety and endurance than it is to make fine pies, cake and pastry from ordinary bread dough. The success of both the metallurgist and the pastry cook depends upon exact control of the baking as much as upon the materials.

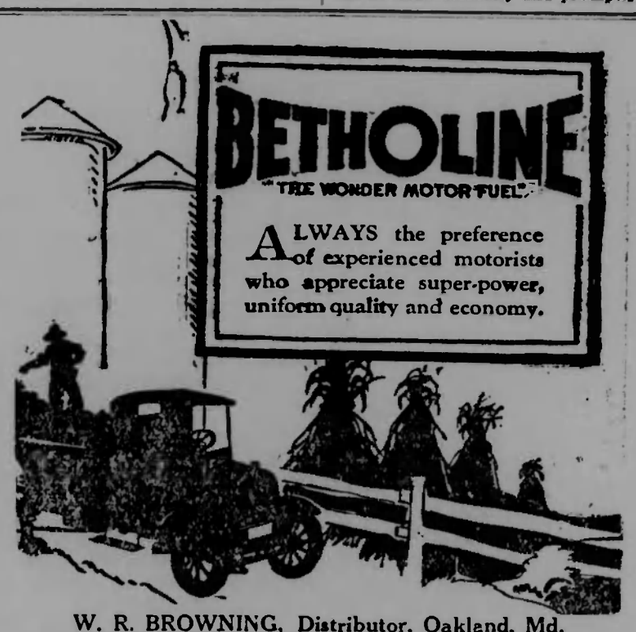
"The alloy steel bar as it comes from the giant hammers, the 'green' gear or other alloy steel part which has just been machined, does not possess these two essential characteristics any more than if made of cheap carbon steel."

At the request of Mr. J. P. Treacy, local dealer, Dodge Brothers engineering department has supplied some interesting information regarding the amount of alloy steel used in their motor cars.

"Accordidng to these figures," states Mr. Treacy, "over 465 pounds of costly chrome vandium steel are purchased for making the vital parts of each Dodge Brothers chassis. The other forgings in each chassis requires less than 175 pounds of open hearth carbon steel.

"Now Dodge Brothers are using a larger weight of chrome vanadium steel in each chassis than they did a year ago and a much larger weight of this fine costly alloy steel than was used in the Dodge Brothers car which won such a good name in the military service during the World War.

"The front axle I-beam, steering knuckles, steering arms and connections, propeller shaft, drive pinion and ring gear, rear axle shafts, crankshafts, cramshaft and many other parts are all heavier that they were in 1917 and are all made of the finest chrome vandamium steel and are all scientifically heat treated in the finest electric furnaces in the industry.



"For example, a 72-pound piece is cut from a three-inch bar of chrome vanadium steel for forging the present crankshaft—a year ago only a 51-pound piece was required.

"Each axle shaft in a Dodge Brothers Motor Car of 1917 was made from a ten-pound bar. For forging the axle shaft of today a specially rolled chrome vanadium steel bar weighing over 17 pounds is used. A Dodge Brothers front spring in 1917 weighed 20 pounds. The front spring today weighs over 28 pounds and, as has always been Dodge Brothers practice, every leaf of every spring is of chrome vanadium steel.

"Significant in that it accounts for the unusual endurance and long life of Dodge Brothers motor car," Mr. Treacy continued, "is the fact that pound for pound Dodge Brothers chassis contains a large proportion of this costly chrome vanadium steel than does the chassis of any other motor car, regardless of price.

"In buildidng the 207,115 motor vehicles shipped by Dodge Brothers, Inc. to dealers during the first six months of 1926, nearly forty-eight thousand tons of chrome vanadium steel were consumed, approximately twice the amount used by any other maker of moter cars."

Time To Be Thankful

NOW the time for the annual national inventory is at hand, and we approach the day when we ought to stop for a moment to give thanks for the blessings which have been conferred upon us during the year. And there is abundant reason to render thanks for the prosperity which has been showered upon us during the year 1926.

The present year has indeed been generally a prosperous one for the various communities which go to make up the United States of America. There have been some spots, of course, which have not had their full share of the good things, but the general tendency has been everywhere for the better, and compared with the best which Europe has to offer, our material record is one which might well excite the envy, if not the admiration, of the world.

Measured by the great corporations which are usually the barometers of our well being, the year has been a good one and there is every evidence that conditions will continue favorable. The twelve greatest industries in the country are said, according to conservative estimates, to have earned a billion dollars so far this year for their stockholders. The figure is one which may well nigh stagger the imagination. The prosperity, however, has not been confined to these twelve, but has been general. It is true that the farmer started the year with some foreboding as to his future, but agricultural conditions have steadily grown better and the farmer is gaining renewed courage.

Materially the country has much to be thankful for, but there are other things, too, worthy to mention. We are at peace with the world and at home attending to our own business as a nation. This is something, too, that is worth being grateful for.

NOTICE TO ALL DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS

This is to notify you that all delinquent taxes must be paid without further delay. So far I have been very lenient with you, but the State and the county are demanding collection of all delinquent taxes.

Changes in the assessments cannot be made by the Treasurer. If any assessment is incorrect the matter should be taken up with the County Commissioners.

A great many persons complain because their property is advertised for delinquent taxes and say they are put to a great deal of expense and humiliation on account of same. Remember if your property is advertised for delinquent taxes it is your fault and not the fault of the Treasurer. Pay up your taxes in full on or before the first day of January of each calendar year and your name will never appear on the delinquent list.

I want to be of the greatest service to you and help you all I can, but I can not help you much unless you try to help yourselves by being prompt in the payment of your taxes and giving me all the information you can.

Never allow more than one years taxes to be upon you at a time; if you have been in the habit of allowing your taxes to double up, be sure to get rid of that habit at once, as it is not fair to me nor best for yourself and cannot be permitted longer.

If you find anything wrong come in and see me and talk the matter over before complaining or mentioning it to others.

Yours very sincerely,

Helmick vs. Walter Fazenbaker and Clara Fazenbaker, his wife; Ada Snyder and Adam Snyder, her husband; Lebbeus Fazenbaker and Victoria Fazenbaker, his wife; Lydia Bittinger and William Bittinger, her husband, and Florence Fazenbaker. No. 2706 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for the sale of the real estate of which Esther Fazenbaker, late of Garrett County, Maryland, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The bill states:—

1st. That Esther Fazenbaker, late of Garrett county, Maryland, deceased, was in her lifetime and at the time of her death seized and possessed of a certain parcel or tract of land situate, lying and being in District No. 12, of Garrett County, Maryland, the same containing one hundred acres, and being known and designated as Military Lots Nos. 2351 and 2353, and being the same which were conveyed unto the said Esther Fazenbaker by deed from Solomon Sibert, bearing date May 3rd, 1874, and duly recorded in Liber W. H. T., No. 4, folio 393, one of the Land Reeords of Garrett County, Maryland, a certified copy of which said deed is herewith filed, marked "Plaintiffs' Exhibit No. 1," and prayed to be taken and considered a part of this bill of complaint.

2nd. That while so seized and possessed of said real estate in Garrett County as aforesaid, the said Esther Fazenbaker departed this life intestate, at Orlando, Florida, on the 7th day of November, 1925, leaving surviving her as her next of kin and heirs at law the following children, to-wit: Walter Fazenbaker, a son who intermarried with Clara Fazenbaker, and who now resides in Garrett County, Maryland; Ada Snyder, a daughter, who intermarried with Adam Snyder, the said Ada Snyder now residing in Garrett County, Maryland, and the said Adam Snyder now residing in the State of Pennsylvania; Lebbeus Fazenbaker, a son, who intermarried with Victoria Fazenbaker, both of whom now reside in the State of Pennsylvania; Lydia Bittinger, a daughter, who intermarried with William Bittinger, and who now reside in the State of West Virginia; Florence Fazenbaker, a daughter, single, who resides in Garrett County, Maryland, and Laura E. 3rd. That the said real estete is not susceptible of partition in kind without material loss and injury to the parties entitled to interests therein and in order to make a division of said interests it will be necessary that the said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof be distributed according to law.

4th. That it would be for the benefit and advantage of all of said parties, that the said real estate be sold and the proceeds thereof distributed to those entitled to the same.

5th. That the estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker is indebted to the said R. C. Helmick in the sum of $537.84 for funeral expenses and other expenses incident thereto; to the First State Bank, of Grantsville, in the sum of $110.00, and to William Winterburg in the sum of $31.00; less such amount as may be paid upon said claims by the administrator of the estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker, statements of which said claims will be filed among the papers in this said case when the amount of said indebtedness to be paid out of the proceeds of sale or the real estate of the said Esther Fazenbaker shall have been finally determined.

The bill then prays for a decree for the sale of the real estate, for the payment of such bills as may be properly proven and for distribution of the balance of the money obtained from said sale amongst those entitled to the same, for general relief, for the writ of supbonea, for the resident defendants and for an order of publication against the non-resident defendants.

NORTHWESTERN PIKE MEETING HELD IN GRAFTON

At Which Many Important Matters of Business Were Discussed By Association.

Completion of the Northwestern Turnpike in 1927 rests with the State legislature.

In a letter from C. E. Hiner, member of the state road commission, read at the business session of the Northwestern Turnpike, Inc., held last week in Grafton, that fact was brought out. Secretary Charles Morgan, of Clarksburg, presented and read the letter.

In this letter to Mr. Morgan the commission member stated, in part, "The commission has under consideration the further improvement of the Northwestern Turnpike mentioned in your letter, but such improvement is contingent on providing further funds for road construction purposes. The present state of finances will not permit of the undertaking of further improvement on the turnpike at this time.

"Provided funds are available, it is believed that the entire road may be completely hard surfaced during the year of 1927."

A recommendation of the legislative committee, presented by Oscar Wilt, Clarksburg, that the corporation make an effort to get the next legislature to authorize re-issue of about $7,000,000 of bonds, soon to mature, was approved. The drafting of a resolution addressed to Governor Gore and the sate road commission, urging completion of the Turnpike at the earliest possible date, was ordered.

A letter from C. S. Mullen, chief engineer of the state highway commission of Virginia, was also read by he secretary, and the letter stated that the commission had made tentative allocation of $100,000 to the "Northwestern Grade" in that state between Winchester and the West Virginia line.

Plans to increase the membership of the association also were discussed at the meeting. Geo. W. Duddear, chairman of the membership committee, reported on plans to push the individual one-dollar memberships, and a recommendation of this committee that the group start immediately after sustaining memberships of from $10 to $25 from business houses, was approved.

The president of the corporation, A. H. Pickering, of Rowlesburg, advised the three directors from each county to form county Northwestern Turnpike committees and awaken the citizenry at large to the importance of getting the turnpike completed as soon as possible.

The matter of co-operation with the residents of the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia will be taken up by Senator F. B. Reynolds, of Keyser, who was requested at the meeting to do this work.

The question of getting Maryland to build its section of the turnpike was discussed, but no definite action was decided upon. It was the concensus of opinion that it would be advisable to get the road paved throughout West Virginia and Virginia first.

J. A. Brown, of Parkersburg, and H. H. Holt, Grafton, chairman and secretary of the publicity committee, respectively, told of a decision to have another meeting in the near future. Their request that the directors undertake to get photos, views and scenes along the pike and send them to Ross B. Johnson, of the state department of agriculture, was approved.

Another suggestion by this committee that the organization try to arrange for funds to advertise the various counties in a booklet, was also received with enthusiasm.

Officers as chosen at the first and organization meeting at Clarksburg, were ratified, while George W. Duddear, Parkersburg; A. L. Helmick, Thomas, and C. W. Lantz, Pennsboro, were named on the executive committee.

Additional directors elected were: M. Aronhalt, of Gormania; M. A. Bean, Morefield; James G. Wright, Burlington; O. S. Cunningham, Upper Tract; H. R. Hollis, Rowlesburg; and Blair Pate, of Parkersburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert White, of Uniontown, Pa., were in Oakland for a few hours on Sunday, having motored here from their home and were accompanied by Mrs. Charles F. Dawson, who had been a guest at the home of her son, Charles, in Chicago for several weeks.

CHESTNUT TREE BLIGHT IS DOOMED BY NATURE

New Stands of Trees Coming Up In Martinsburg and Hagerstown Section of State

From the country roundabout Martinsburg and Hagerstown, comes the report, authentic in every particular, that nature has succeeded where the scientific mind has failed in putting a stop to the chestnut tree blight in that part of the country.

Several years ago every chestnut tree on South Mountain the country surrounding Hagerstown and Martinsburg, was wiped out by a blight, at the same time causing the loss of a livelihood for hundreds of mountain residents who made their living partially from the sale of this nut. Now a new stand of chestnut trees, from the seed, are springing up all over the mountain and they appear to be immune from the blight.

Mountaineers who have discovered this new growth, predict that with several decades, chestnuts will again be found in abundance in these same mountains. They believe that nature has discovered what scientists have failed thus far to do—coping with the blight that denuded the mountain.

The blight first made its appearance in the United States in 1904, affecting the bark of chestnut trees on Long Island. It was identified as a fungus, caused by a parsite, hitherto confined to Europe. Some nurserymen imported a few tainted trees and the native trees were defenseless to resist it. The blight soon spread to the forests of New York and by this time scientists became alarmed. After twenty years of frantic research and after hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent in vain on remedies, they were forced to the conclusion that there was no hope of checking the disease and that not enough trees will survive to restock the continent. The parasite soon spread from New York to other forests until practically every chestnut tree has either been killed or doomed. The blight is now marching southward below the Mason and Dixon line.

The discovery of this new stand of young chestnut trees, however, is expected to lead foresters to cease their efforts of checking the blight among the old trees and devote their efforts to restocking the forests with young ones.

School Hygiene Practice.

Dental examinations have been given 102,741 children, 112,070 fillings made, 3,425 tooth drills have been conducted, and 1,567 lectures given, attended by 207,376 school children in the South Carolina schools during the last three years, according to a recent report from that State. Statewide dental clinics were inaugurated in the schools three years ago by the mouth hygiene department of the State Board of Health. Clinics have been conducted during this time in every school in 17 of the 46 counties of South Carolina.

Several other States have instituted dental clinics as a part of their regular school health programs. Training hte pupils in better habits of personal hygiene is recognized as one of the primary duties of the public school. The best results are obtained when the State, the county and the local districts co-operate in the establishment of county health units to supervise the school's health. Three hundred and seven counties in the United States are reported as having regularly organized health units at the present time.

CHRISTMASSAVINGS FUNDS SENT OUT BY LOCAL BANK

Approximately $5,000 Distributed Among 150 Depositors by The First National.

An amount of money approximating $5,000, representing the Christmas Savings fund of one hundred and fifty depositors of The First National Bank of Oakland, was sent out by the bank yesterday to its customers of this department.

The Christmas Savings feature was established by the bank a year ago. Men and women became interested and by depositing small amounts each week they have at their command just at this time when demands are made by little Johnny and older Mary Ann for funds with which to buy Christmas remembrances, sums sufficient, in many cases, to meet these demands without having to wait for the next pay day or disturb other funds put by for specific purposes, such as paying up arrearages on their preachers' salary, a grocery bill that is now or may be due tomorrow and a thousand and one other things necessary to keep the home fires burning.

The savings feature of the First National is an excellent one. Accounts are now being opened at the bank for the Christmas of next year. The bank officials are ready to talk the matter over with anyone interested and they confidently expect that the number of accounts in this department will be greatly augmented and the amount to be distributed next Christmas-time materially increased over this year.

Improved Telephone Practice in Oakland Office.

Oakland has a new telephone operating practice whereby the local operator completes station-to-station toll and long distance calls in the same manner that city calls are made, according to an announcement by Eugene Bowers, manager of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company.

Where the calling party knows the number of the telephone in the city with which he wishes to talk, he does not have to ask for long distance as in the past, but simply gives the telephone number to the local operator just as any local call is made in Oakland. The calling party will hold the line until the called telephone answers or the operator gives a definite report as in completing local connections.

This new operating method, according to Mr. Bowers' statement will do much to improve long distance service from Oakland either to nearby points such as Cumberland, Martinsburg, Grafton or Fairmont; or to more distant points such as Philadelphia, New York, Pittsburgh, Chicago or Cincinnati. If the number of the telephone wanted is not known, Mr. Bowers says, "ask information".

The management of the telephone company here feels this new and station-to-station long distance service will be especially attractive to telephone users. Where a "particular person" call is made, the calling party should ask the local operator for long distance and place the call in the regular way as at present.

All patrons of the school are cordially invited to be present and become better acquainted with the work of the association. COMMITTEE.

The military training which our boys take during their school life does not make militarists out of them. It strengthens their minds by strengthening their bodies and gives them a better chance of becoming able to take care of themselves if the country is ever again forced into conflict. But it is doubtful whether the same can be said of the Russian military idea. Uncle Sam has no desire to force his civilization or culture on the rest of the world. We find it about all we can do to attend to our own business. With Red Russia the situation is different.

COMMUNITY SALES DAY IN OAKLAND WEDNESDAY

At Which Time Genuine Bargains In All Classes of Merchandise Will Be Offered.

Oakland expects to have one of the greatest marketing days in its history next Wednesday at which time the first of a series of "Community Sales Days", to be extended indefinitely, will be inaugurated should the initial bargain giving affair prove as successful as it should and which it is expected to be.

Bargains in some one individual item of merchandise is offered by the fifty or more merchants whose advertisements appear in The Republican today. In addition to the usc of the local newspapers the committee on advertising is also using a page in the Terra Alta Republican, hence the sale will be widely advertised and the people of our neighboring city will participate in the bargains offered.

The local advertising committee, which was appointed by Chairman T. A. Gonder, of the Business Men's Association at a meeting recently held, is composed of Mayor Lawrenee Fraley, I. R. Rudy and C. N. McIntire The committee, through its representative, Harry McComas, did its work well and succeeded in interesting every merchant in some one line of merchandise at bargain prices. With the merchants all co-operating in this sale augurs well for the success of future efforts along this line.

Those dealing regularly in Oakland should make a special effort to come to town that day; those who deal in other towns should be here that day without fail, for the bargains to be secured are all well-worth the time required.

Those participating in the sale are Gonder's Pharmacy, Oakland Jewelry Co., Brown's Store, W. A. RUTH AND NAOMI.

Book of Ruth.

Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.—Ruth 1:16.

STORIED HISTORY.

"The book of Ruth lies like a beautiful gem between the armine of the Judges and the purple of Kings." For charm and beauty it will be hard to find in any literature the equal of these brief chapters. Its story is quickly told. It chronicles the family of Elimalech of Bethlehem who in the days of famine determined to migrate to Moab where bread might be had. So he, his wife and his two boys packed up their belongings and settled somewhere beyond the purple hills that beckoned at sunset from the city's gate. It was to be a temporary move, merely for work, but the days lengthened into years and the boys did what others have done—they married girls of the land and the family was anchored. But death stepped in, uprooted their tree and left three widows under a single roof. Naomi's heart hunger for home brought her back to Bethlehem with Ruth whose love for the old lady refused to allow her to face the hardships of unprovided age alone. Setting herself determinedly to provide for the wants of both, she began gleaning in the fields of Boaz only to have the farmer fall desperately in love with her. The marriage is soon arranged and into the home presently comes a child's cry and a grandchild is cradled by Naomi. The foot note explains that this baby boy becomes the grandfather of the great David. It is a perfectly familiar form of writing that we eagerly read in historical novels and get a picture of the times far surpassing the mere recounting of facts. The line of David is illumined and the blood stream that emerged in the Christ carries mingled with it that of this alien girl who for love's sake turned her face toward Bethlehem, the home of the royal line.

There is another reason for its appearing. There came a day in the life of Israel when aliens were excluded, when marriages with women of other blood was being tahooed in Jerusalem, and families were being broken up by the process. This little tract is a bit of the finest propaganda ever written in favor of a more liberal policy on the part of Judaism. Even their greatest ruler carried the blood of an alien in his veins. All folks of other races are not pariahs, and it bears a message as pertinent for America as it ever carried for Judah.

IN THE MIGRANT'S BAGGAGE.

Into a strange community they went just to get a job. They were not interested in conditions or in customs that differed from their own. They were merely asking for a chance to live and work. Moab seems to have been generous enough for there is no hint of ask in the story and Moab did not shut her doors to their presence as we so often do. They did not live in "foreign quarters" or in "Little Jerusalem". Their boys were given free entree among the daughters of the land and no one seems to have chided the children for marrying a Jew and a foreigner. And the home was generous also—there was no condeming the boys for their choice. Indeed there was far more than the mere acquiescence for these brides were brought into the home itself and all its life was shared with them. There was no "race superiority" on either side. Verily some of our "Golden age" lies invitingly in the past instead of a beacon for advance. And these migrants, the least desirable of immigrants because it is the attraction of the job and not the desire to become a citizen of the country, brought Jewish baggage with them. Their God was kept in a foreign land. Some folks moving even among ourselves do not do so well, for they abandon the Church as they go. The songs of Bethlehem were still sung. The altar fires of Jehovah were still lighted. They moved their religion with them and were evidently not ashamed of it. And such was the impression made and such the friendliness of Moab that it was felt as no menace that they held to their own church in the new land. They made their religion attractive because they were loyal to its best and lived it on that level.

THE DISASTER AND THE DECISION.

The migrant stayed longer than he expected. His grave was there. The boys carried on the work of shepherds perhaps, but there came the time when some epidemic reached them both, and in spite of all that the three women could do the little cemetery was enlarged and three graves marked its confines. It was then that Naomi determined to go back to Bethlehem. God had smitten her and she doubtless felt it as a condemnation for her leaving His land. For each god was a geographic deity. It was a religious revival in her own heart induced by the sorrows through which she had passed. It was the blown up flame of her reconsecrated life that lit the preparations for departure within the cottage among Moab's hills. The three set out together toward the fords of the Jordan. Presently they reached the borders of the descent and Naomi paused to bid them goodbye. Orpah turned obediently, but Ruth stuck. She would never desert her in her need. So they two passed on together, neither dreaming that through sacrificial love both had become immortal.

THE HIDDEN SPRINGS.

What is the source of this unusual picture of devotion? It lay in Naomi's attractive life that honored her God. Had she been a shrew it is quite needless to say that Ruth would have never followed her to Bethlehem. It was a high type of piety that was lived in the Moabitish farmhouse. In spite of the possibilities of friction when two alien wives, certainly unwanted, were crowded under her roof, she had lived her love life so truly as to lift this young girl completely out of her old surroundings and her old habits and her old faith. That was an accomplishment, indeed. Ruth would never have entered the Davidic line save for Naomi's winsome living of her religion. Here lies the point of the story for us—are we making our faith attractive to those about us? Are aliens pressing their way in because of our presentation of the beauty of the Christian life?

There is room also for the interpretation of her troubles by Naomi. She came back extremely bitter over God's dealing with her. Years pass and she would have been heard rejoicing over the way He had led her, so that even her afflictions had been of Him to further both her own faith and to carry His great plans forward. Sorrow always has a key if we will trust God to reveal it.

No Engine Fumes in Buick Closed Cars!

This vital new Buick improvement does away with noxious odors. It adds greater luxury and pleasure to enclosed car operation.

The Vacuum Ventilator serves another very important purpose. With it, crankcase vapors have no opportunity to condense and dilute the oil. Owners of 1927 Buicks are advised to drain their crankcase oil only 4 times during the year.

For luxury, and for economy, own a Buick.

NOTICE TO ALL DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS

This is to notify you that all delinquent taxes must be paid without further delay. So far I have been very lenient with you, but the State and the county are demanding collection of all delinquent taxes.

Changes in the assessments cannot be made by the Treasurer. If any assessment is incorrect the matter should be taken up with the County Commissioners.

A great many persons complain because their property is advertised for delinquent taxes and say they are put to a great deal of expense and humiliation on account of same. Remember if your property is advertised for delinquent taxes it is your fault and not the fault of the Treasurer. Pay up your taxes in full on or before the first day of January of each calendar year and your name will never appear on the delinquent list.

I want to be of the greatest service to you and help you all I can, but I can not help you much unless you try to help yourselves by being prompt in the payment of your taxes and giving me all the information you can.

Never allow more than one years taxes to be upon you at a time; if you have been in the habit of allowing your taxes to double up, be sure to get rid of that habit at once, as it is not fair to me nor best for yourself and cannot be permitted longer.

If you find anything wrong come in and see me and talk the matter over before complaining or mentioning it to others.

Yours very sincerely,
ALBERT L. LEE, Treasurer,
Garrett County, Md.

Beginning at 12:30 o'clock on Saturday, December 11th, the Tri-Mu class of St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school will conduct a food sale in D. M. Dixon & Son's store in Oakland.

THE ACCUSING FOOTSTEPS

By LLOYD EVANS

(© by W. G. Chapman.)

ALWAYS the footsteps behind me, dull, hollow, but echoing—never before. Did they but precede I might have had hope, for then they might guide me to some haven of rest, peace for my tired heart.

I was not a wicked man, nor a mean man, nor a dissipated man. I was only a murderer—to the world never that, but to my own conscience, yes. A thousand deaths were in my heart and one poor victory—if I could call it that.

"I consent to the marriage."

"Secret, of course?"

"It must be that way under the circumstances."

Burned into my brain were these three sentences, for they started the train of circumstances that resulted in a terrible tragedy.

It was six weeks since that I overheard Huldah Evans speak the first, Vane Telford made reply. Then her final words—"my love, my adored one!" She whom I worshiped was a party to a clandestine complication with a rival I had never feared, nor before that even suspected.

He had come to the village, a stranger. He had made several calls on Huldah. I was curious, but she never apprised me as to the personality of her new acquaintance nor his motive in visiting her. That vividly remembered afternoon I was lining a high hedge surrounding the Evans place when I heard the brief colloquy noted. I had come to the spot with my heart full of hope and love. I left it vengeful, embittered, my soul immersed in the blackest despair.

I wandered towards the narrow but deep rolling stream at the edge of the town, my spirit dazed, my heart distracted. This, then, was the end of it all. She loved another! I flung myself on the grassy bank, watching the swift eddies just above the waterfall. It was an unfrequented spot for the present, for the old foot bridge had been condemned, as all the regular townsmen knew, a new structure being proposed, and the roadway on either side of the stream was blockaded some distance back. There signs were up, warning the approaching driver and pedestrian of peril.

I sat in a daze, staring blankly at the rushing waters, madly tempted to plunge beneath their surface and end all my misery. It was getting on toward dusk when a sharp, cheery whistle attracted my attention.

There, not fifty yards distant, was Telford. He was warbling a careless carol, swinging along like a man in love with life, as if he had just heard some joyful news.

In a flash I pictured the situation. He, my hated rival, was beloved by Huldah. I was the despised one. A blur of blood passed before my eyes, and then—

"He is headed for the bridge—he doesn't know!" I uttered breathlessly.

I started up in wild alarm. In a flash I saw that, making a short cut for the town by an unaccustomed route, Telford had struck into the road at a point ahead of the blockade. He had missed the danger sign. He had no knowledge of the condition of the bridge. Two days previous a horse and wagon had gone through the rotted plankway, a great hole gaped in the center of the bridge, and some of the stringers were hanging suspended by mere splinters.

"Stop—"

The word died in my throat meaningless, for the devil had seized me. What was this man to me, that I should not allow him to go headlong on his careless way? He had embittered by existence, why should I seek to save his life? My manhood cowed. Hatred, cowardice, guilt, held me spellbound beyond the saving moment.

Crash!—a shriek, a splash, a gurgle, and all was over—all save the footsteps proceeding across the hollow echoing plankway — tramp! tramp! tramp!

But now all that was human within me aroused. In horror I regarded my willful act of crime. I ran to the edge of the bridge, I shouted wildly. I tore down the dim shore, calling madly the name of the man I had—murdered.

Only the sound of the waves, the roar of the falls below, the night bird's thrill answered me. The void had opened up and swallowed my rival. Huldah was free, but I—tramp! tramp! tramp! ever the accusing footsteps, and always behind me, pursuing, challenging, accusing.

Looking back now I marvel how I passed those dreadful days, those wakeful nights of the two weeks succeeding. Twice I had called upon Huldah. I was amazed at the fact that she betrayed no anxiety, none of the suspense of a bride expectant whose object of devotion had mysteriously disappeared. My guilt drove me to make my visits brief and constrained, although Huldah seemed glad to see me. She had with her now a cousin, a pale-faced, hopeless-eyed girl, who seemed an invalid, Martha Dawes.

No word of the fate of Telford had reached the newspapers. I had lined the river for miles, making cautious inquiries, but with no result. Then one evening those torturing footsteps drove me to a resolution: I would see Huldah once more, confess and leave the place forever.

It was twilight when I reached her home. She sat in a rustic chair in the garden humming a low tune. Miss Dawes, near by, was gazing with sad, far-away eyes at the crescent moon. I leaned over the chair and said to Huldah:

"I wish to tell you something of Vance Telford."

She started, glanced quickly at her guest, and, her finger on her lip, led me to a distance.

"What of Mr. Telford?" she challenged, with a certain sternness that chilled me.

"He is dead, and I—am his murderer!"

And then the words leaped over each other tumultuously as I told my story, all of it, without reservation.

She grasped a tree for support, her face a white void.

"Go away!" she faltered, waving her hand distractedly. "I must think—think!"

It was all over! She hated me, she despised me! I wandered about aimlessly, but the influence of fatality drew me to the river. Ever, it seemed, calling to me, for miles I trod its banks, the footsteps—tramp! tramp! tramp!—beating incessantly on my agonized ears.

I must have gone several miles, when I drew behind a bush near the shelving shore of the stream to avoid meeting a man progressing slowly with the aid of a cane. I was in no mood for companionship. I moved too far, my foot slipped, I went headlong, and was conscious of my head striking the water and a rock at the same time. Then I was insensible.

My blood curdled as I regained consciousness, for I recognized that the man bending over me had dragged me to safety, and that man, in form and substance, Vance Telford!

Within an hour I knew all the story of his rescue down the stream, his convalescence, his hegira now to the Evans home. And then I learned that it was the sad-hearted Miss Dawes who loved him, and that Huldah had arranged for their clandestine marriage because her cousin could not live without him. Her family did not like Telford, nor did Huldah, but it was arranged that Telford was to wed Miss Dawes secretly and then go away and make a man of himself, for he had been a sad profligate.

But now I knew the man was in earnest when he told me how his narrow graze of death had reformed him. Arm in arm we went to the Evans home, to make two anxious hearts happy, for Huldah really loved me.

And then—the footsteps died out forever.

Supply of Rum Once Essential to Sailors

In the "good old days" a very important factor in the ship's larder was the rum barrel or barrels. It was of a higher standard usually than was the salt pork or hardtack. It was never kept in the galley, nor was it lashed to the side of the vessel. The cook or the crew had no recourse to it, and the captain held the key to the treasure. In merchant ships or whalers the crew never got an introduction to it except in stress of weather, extraordinary hard work, illness, or "Fourth of July" or Thanksgiving celebration. In case of mutiny the rum barrel was the first booty captured, and then ensued a state of chaos and pandemonium more easily imagined than described. Needless to say, the free flow of rum did not tend to more intelligent handling of the vessel, more efficient working out of logarithms, use of the quadrant, sextant and compass, or more accurate finding of latitude or longitude.

In all the war vessels of the British navy rum used to be, and presumably still is, one of the most valued perquisites of the sailor and marine. There was a daily allowance of a gill of Jamaica rum for each man. The "grog" was composed of two parts water to one of rum, and the "allowance" was served at the midday meal. The man who declined to drink his "grog" was given a money allowance for it, and he drew this with his month's pay.

In the old days when American vessels carried rum in the cabins it was but perfectly proper, as every well-regulated home had its supply, and the village storekeeper sold it as freely as he did molasses.—Fall River Globe.

Notoriety and Fame

Mandy was very fond of telling jokes to her neighbors, so one morning she decided to keep Rachel guessing this one.

"Rachel, what is the difference between notoriety and fame?"

"Law's, Mandy, I can't ever guess that one," said Rachel.

"Well, a thousand dollars worth of roses will barely fill a room with perfume, but with a dollar's worth of fried onions you could scent up the whole town. Now, Rachel, that's the difference."—Everybody's.

His Achievement

"See that old feller tottering along on the other side of the street there?" asked the landlord of the tavern at Peeweecuddyhump. "That's Hod Durmitt, our oldest inhabitant."

"Um," responded the hypercritical guest. "What has he ever done of any consequence?"

"Done! Why cat-fetch it, he's lived here all his life!"—Kansas City Star.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1926.

UNCLE JOE CANNON.

The United States lost a real, stalwart American in the passing of Uncle Joe Cannon, venerable statesman and patriot. The death of the grizzled Illinois veteran was received with regret everywhere. Newspapers and public men who fought him in the hey-day of his powers, vie with each other in paying tribute when the Grim Reaper laid him low.

From this parting public tribute the present day politicians should gather a valuable lesson. The admiration for Uncle Joe was well nigh universal in America. He was loved by his friend because of his stalwart unflinging support of the principles in which he believed. He was admired by his political opponents, for his courage and his consistency. At all times, in the hour of victory and in the day of defeat Uncle Joe stood by his principles. When it became evident that the principles for which he fought were to pass under a cloud the grizzled old veteran did not desert the ship. He fought all the harder for what he believed to be right in the face of certain defeat. And then when the cloud had passed and his theories had been vindicated, he was the same calm, stalwart, cheerful Uncle Joe. Always the same, always the real constructive American.

That is why he was respected by friend and foe alike, and here is the lesson for the present-day politician. The demagogue may gain passing power and popularity by bending to the popular passion, knowing that the temporary craze may be unsafe and unsound. But sooner or later his political sins find him out and he is buried under an avalanche that leaves him nothing but oblivion. The only way to gain lasting fame, and what is even better, the esteem of friend and foe alike, is to stand firm for principle in victory and in defeat. That is the lesson which the life of Uncle Joe Cannon has for the politician and statesman of the present generation.

A GREAT, NEW BUSINESS.

One of the newest sciences which we have with us is the science of advertising. And advertising has really come to be a science. It is no longer conducted in a haphazard way. Men of brains and ability have studied it and have evolved plans which bring about the greatest amount of good through advertising, benefit to the public as well as to the advertiser.

It is pleasing to know that men everywhere are beginning to appreciate the great part for good which advertising plays in our everyday life. That we do not yet fully appreciate this good, however, is evidened by the fact that only a small percentage of the potential advertisers avail themselves of its assistance.

In a recent address, President Coolidge pointed to the fact that we are still apt to place too low an estimate on the subject of advertising. Mammoth factories and great transportation systems impress us when we come in personal contact with them. The President said, but we have not yet come to appreciate the great business which greets us through the advertising pages in the newspapers and periodicals of the country. Yet even the most casual examination must point out to us, the President added, that advertising has now become a great business.

"When we stop to consider the part which advertising plays in the modern life of production and trade we see that basically it is that of education. It informs its readers of the existence and nature of commodities by explaining the advantages to be derived from their use and creates for them a wider demand. It makes new thoughts, new desires and new actions. By changing the attitude of mind it changes the material condition of the people. Somewhere I have seen ascribed to Abraham Lincoln the statement that 'In this and like communities public sentiment is everything. With public sentiment nothing can fail; without it nothing can succeed; consequently he who molds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. He makes statutes and decisions possible or impossible to be executed.'

"Advertising creates and changes this foundation of all popular action, public sentiment, or public opinion. It is the most potent influence in adopting and changing the habits and modes of life, affecting what we eat, what we wear, and the work and play of the whole nation. Formerly it was an axiom that competition was the life of trade. Under the methods of the present day it would seem to more appropriate to say that advertising is the life of trade."

By creating a demand and stimulating business advertising tends to reduce prices and the cost of living. It raises, too, the standard of the products which we buy. It brings, therefore, greater prosperity to the advertiser and greater satisfaction to the buyer. There is no longer any doubt about its general benefit. But, as yet, few of us realize its tremendous importance.

OUR INTERNATIONAL MIND

With the commonly accepted view that the United States will not now enter the world court, and that we are farther away than ever from the influence of the League of Nations, a good many people are rejoicing over the fact that the danger of our interfering with the domestic troubles of Europe has entirely passed. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is true that we are not going into the League, nor into the Court, for that matter, unless the European nations reverse themselves on our reservations.

But this does not mean that the danger is over. For so long as the United States remains the creditor nation and continues to pour billions of gold into Europe there will always be a demand that Uncle Sam interfere in European affairs whenever the holders of European securities in this country feel that their interests are in danger.

If the holders of European securities were only a few International bankers on the eastern seaboard, it might be difficult, though not impossible to move public sentiment. But this is not the situation. New York has become the money capital of the world. European nations owe us billions of dollars and they owe this not only to our government and to our bankers, but to thousands of investors. European securities in all parts of the country. It is estimated that in addition to the staggering sum already owed us, approximately another billion dollars in gold will be poured into Europe this year by American investors.

As an Associated Press, report recently put it: "This golden stream which once seeped principally from sources along the Atlantic seaboard now flows in large volume from the reservoir of savings in the great Middlewest and Pacific Coast."

When we loaned nearly four billions to foreign lands during the past three years and the total of our private loans to Europe now approximates ten billion dollars. The internationalists who want us to become involved in European troubles are gleefully saying that these loans to Europe are bound to give us an "international mind" in place of the old American "mind-our-own-business" spirit.

An English newspaper recently commenting on President Coolidge's speech at Kansas City, consoled itself with the statement that before long we would be in the midst of European's problems whether we want to or not, because of our immense loans to Europe.

Of course these loans may be all properly secured and doubtless are from the purely financial standpoint, although of course no one can predict what the world situation will be ten years hence. But the fact remains that the internationalists are right when they say that our immense investments in Europe will make some of our people more and more interested in Europe and less interested in America in a financial way. The internationalists through these loans hope to increase sentiment for a cancellation of the government debts, and for a breaking down of our tariff system. In short they hope to do indirectly what they thought might be accomplished through the League of Nations and an unreserved adherence to the World Court, two agencies which they now find are ineffective.

Good Posture.

"Sit straight; stand straight, walk straight." These orders from the daily dozen are thoroughly familiar to Boy and Girl Scouts and to everybody else who knows the rules of the health game. They are particularly worth following, because good posture, according to all authorities, has a direct bearing on health. For that reason, all children who have been examined at the health conferences held throughout the State under the auspices of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health and who have had bad posture have been referred to their own doctors for advice or for corrective exercises.

Speaking of the close connection between posture and health, Dr. J. H. M. Knox, Jr., Chief of the Bureau, said: "Everyone recognizes the person, man, woman or child with a stooped posture when standing or sitting, but apparently most people assume that this posture is an inherited condition, for which parents or ancestors, and not they themselves, are responsible.

"On the contrary, it is now known that poor posture is generally the result of bad habits, and like other habits is acquired gradually through inattention or indifference. Moreover, it has been definitely shown that good posture, that is an upright position when standing or sitting, with shoulders thrown back and chest prominent, with the abdomen flat, furthers health; while contracted chest and relaxed abdomen are often factors in inducing ill health.

"The causes of these facts are not far to seek. A narrow chest contracted in any direction, diminishes the space required for the normal extension of the lungs and free action of the heart, and consequently these organs are often less able to withstand diseases and strain when thus unduly hampered. Again, the prominent relaxed abdomen, which is so often present in children with stooped shoulders and weak abdominal muscles, permits the sagging of the stomach and intestines, with a consequent stretching of the nerves and blood vessels supplying them, and so it interferes with digestion. These form what doctors call a vicious circle. The sagging abdomen tends to bring on indigestion and this in turn produces further relaxation.

"These abnormal conditions are not necessary; they are more apt to occur in some children than in others, but they can nearly always be prevented or corrected in their early stages by giving attention to upright posture when standing or sitting, and by taking simple setting up exercises night and morning, under a physician's direction.

"In the examination of thousands of young children in Maryland, too large a proportion were found to have defective postures. Because this may have a far-reaching influence on their subsequent health, the matter is brought to the attention of their parents, so that while it is possible this important physical handicap may be corrected or cured."

Washington's Early Adventures Now Assuming New Significance

By HENRY BOTSFORD

AFTER well nigh a century and three-quarters a new interest has recently been aroused in the earliest military adventures of George Washington. When barely twenty-one years old, in 1753, Washington was sent by Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia into the far northwestern wilderness—that is, northwestern Pennsylvania—to warn the French that they must cease their efforts to occupy that region. Recent researches have given a new historical significance to that expedition, during which Washington, always reckless of his personal safety, had one of his narrow escapes from death at the hands of a treacherous Indian guide.

The French at that time occupied Canada and claimed the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys. Though the fringe of English speaking colonies along the Atlantic contained the chief European population, France maintained sovereignty over most of North America's area. They were apparently determined to occupy northwestern Pennsylvania, partly because it was known even then to be rich in petroleum.

Region's Wealth Known

Pioneers and missionaries, English, French, German and Dutch, had all reported to their governments that the petroleum was of great potential value. There is, however, no reason to believe that Washington knew of its existence or value until his adventure of 1753. Then he learned that the oil had long been used by the Indians and the pioneering whites for fuel and light, for medicine and in making war paint. Washington was so much impressed with its possibilities that he later became owner of a large area of oil-bearing lands. Although the petroleum industry in its modern form was then undreamed of, Washington was so sure that a fortune resided in his oil-bearing lands that in his will he listed them as his most valuable holdings. In the property schedule attached to the will he wrote:

"This tract was taken up by General Lewis and myself on account of the bituminous spring which it contains, of so inflammable a nature as to burn as freely as spirits and as nearly difficult to extinguish."

The Will of Washington

Some historians declare that in an earlier will Washington dedicated this "burning spring" to the public. At any rate, it had passed from his ownership before his death. He sold this tract for $200,000, but, suspecting it might revert to his estate under a mortgage, he warned his heirs that should it do so it would be worth much more than the $200,000.

Although Washington's first knowledge of petroleum was gained within a few miles of the place where the first oil well in the world was drilled, that first well was not opened until one hundred and six years later, 1859. In that year Edwin Laurentine Drake bored the first well, just south of Titusville, Pennsylvania, and really started the modern petroleum industry.

A Development Wonder

Today the American industry is the major part of the world's oil business. Americans are directing oil developments all over the world. It is all part of the huge problem: to make sure that the tomorrows shall see America's requirements met. Every decade the production of petroleum has doubled. Science and technical progress have met all demands. Foreign investment and development are in the nature of insurance for the future.

In the days of Drake and the industry's beginnings petroleum's value lay in lubricants and kerosene. The age of machinery was only beginning, with its insatiate demand for lubricants, while kerosene, though the best illuminant ever known, was dangerous because poor refining left gasoline that was liable to explode. It is difficult nowadays, when the world is being combed for more petroleum to make more gasoline, to realize that gasoline was once a nuisance and a menace. The internal combustion engine created the demand for gasoline, now the primary product of petroleum. The demands of millions of motor cars increasing constantly, invention and chemistry were set at work by the captains of the industry to make the barrel of petroleum turn out a larger and larger proportion of gasoline. This was done by the cracking process, through which every year now sees a larger proportion of crude oil turned into gasoline.

High and Growing Demands

Today well-nigh 2,500,000 barrels of petroleum are required every day to satisfy the demands for motor cars, tractors, trucks, buses, artificial gas plants and the innumerable by-products. Invention is constantly finding new uses, as enterprise just as constantly finds new supplies of petroleum. The wonderful and rather mysterious fluid has revolutionized social habits and industrial methods; yet it is only two-thirds of a century since the industry had its feeble beginning in the Pennsylvania oil country.

This year the country will use about 750,000,000 barrels of petroleum. The country will use 700,000,000 gallons of gasoline and will export 1,900,000 more. The production, processing and marketing of petroleum is probably second only to agriculture among American industries.

Roundly, 70 per cent of the world's petroleum industry is American. Ten billions of capital is invested in it—half the valuation of the national railroad system. It employs just about 1,000,000 people. The petroleum pipe line system, girdironing a good share of the country, aggregates about 85,000 miles. Petroleum revolutionized naval warfare by bringing in the oil burning ship; it is fast revolutionizing merchant marines in the same fashion. Multiplication of motor cars, along with the special taxation of their gasoline, has made possible the modern highway system.

A True Social Service

Perhaps the most nearly revolutionary result of Drake's modernization of the petroleum industry is to be found in the change it has brought in the life of rural America. It has carried the city to the country, the country to the city. It has, by making possible the cheap and quick transportation that everybody nowadays enjoys, enabled country and city to know and understand each other as they never did before. It has brought social and educational privileges to country dwellers that a few decades ago seemed absolutely denied to them. On the one hand it has enabled the cities to spread out into suburban areas and the zone of country estates; on the other, it has enabled the people of the open country to have neighbors, society, church and school privileges, intimate acquaintance.

It is a historic fact that the tendency toward division of interest and understanding between city and country is the most serious internal menace to the security of nations, to the integrity of society.

More than anything else, country and city need to know and understand each other and each other's problems. The easy transportation, the ready opportunity for association and acquaintance that have come with the Age of Petroleum have made possible, in this favored country at least, exactly this new intimacy and understanding.

4-H CLUB WORK SHOULD BE EXPANDED

More than 565,000 farm boys and girls are enrolled in 4-H club work in the United States. They belong to about 41,000 separate clubs. There are about 11,000 young people on farms, all of whom could profit from learning better farm and home practices through club work. "The work should be so expanded," says Dr. C. B. Smith, chief of the Office of Cooperative Extension Work, in a new circular, "that all rural boys and girls who want to can take part in it and receive its benefits."

The organization, purposes and scope of 4-H club work are explained by Dr. Smith, who goes on to say that the outstanding characteristic of the work is that each member conducts a substantial piece of work, designed to show some better practice on the farm or in the home or community; keeps a record of results; explains the work to others, and makes a final report on the work. The individual boy or girl is reached through the national agricultural extension system, in which the United States Department of Agriculture, the land grant colleges, and various local agencies cooperate. Typical lines of club work are: Growing an acre or more of corn in accordance with directions, raising a sow and litter of pigs or a calf according to instructions, growing fruit and vegetables in accordance with the dietary needs of the family, canning the surplus in the most approved ways, and other phases of farm and home work that especially appeals to young people.

The work is carried on with boys and girls 10 to 20 years of age, usually through groups of 10 to 20 members. These members not only come into contact with their local leaders, who know how to do things, but with the work of one another, in which rivalry plays a part, and with the public in field meetings, exhibits at fairs, festivals and demonstrations.

The particular value of club work is that it gets hold of young people while their minds are plastic and gives them guidance when they need it; teaches them some of the inspiring things in agriculture, and gives them visions of its possibilities as a life job. It provides opportunity for them to share home responsibilities in keeping with the ability and gives them a part in solving the problems of rural communities. It influences the farm and home practices of the members' families. It develops rural leadership. In short, the circular summarizes, "4-H club boys and girls are doers. They are taught high ideals and standards. They meet together, work together, play together, cooperate, achieve. They play the game fairly. They demonstrate, work, earn money, and acquire property. They learn and teach the better way on the farm, in the home, and in the community. They build up their bodies and their health through right living. They train their hands to be useful, their minds to think clearly, and their hearts to be kind."

Copies of Miscellaneous Circular 77-M, "Boys' and Girls' 4-H Club Work," may be obtained free while the supply lasts, by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

Buy Christmas Seals Now.

Flinging to the four corners of the State its challenge to continue the battle against the "Great White Plague," the Maryland Tuberculosis Association, and its county branches have completed preparations for the nineteenth annual Christmas Seal sale, which opened on Thanksgiving Day and will continue until Christmas, stated the chairman of the seal sale for Garrett county, the committee having it in charge being the members of the Oakland Civic Club.

Attractive posters, window cards and other display material have been received here and have been placed in the stores and office buildings.

The chairman stated that seventy per cent of all returns from the sale of seals will remain in the county and will be used to support the county health work; five per cent will be sent to National headquarters to assist in carrying on the National fight against tuberculosis, and twenty-five per cent will be sent to the State Association and be used to help defray the expenses of supplies and services rendered during the year.

Although the deaths from tuberculosis have been cut in half in the last twenty years, the "White Plague" still remains as the most important cause of death, since it exacts its greatest toll between the ages of twenty and thirty years, the ages of greatest economic value.

The chairman said that when you buy the Tuberculosis Christmas Seals you are helping to support the following activities, carried on by the Maryland Tuberculosis Association and its county branches:

1. The "Miracle House," a preventorium for undernourished and underprivileged children of Maryland, treated at Clairborne. Last year 98 Maryland children were treated.

2. Nursing service—financial support to county public health nurses throughout the State.

Tuberculosis clinics—for the past three years, tuberculosis clinics have been conducted in the counties, in operation with State Health Department authorities and practicing physicians. During this time, 715 clinics have been held in the State, 28 of this number being conducted in this county. These clinics are rendering distinct service to the people of the counties who are unable to pay a consultant's fee. New cases of tuberculosis, suspects and contacts are examined when referred by local physicians for corroboration of diagnosis.

4. Child Health Education, assisting the county school teachers in developing health habit formation of the children through the performance of health rules.

5. Education and Publicity, informing the public through the press, motion pictures, posters, buttons, and exhibits that tuberculosis is preventable and that one may very often be cured if discovered in its early stages.

The chairman said that the Christmas Seal sale for Garrett county, the committee having it in charge being the members of the Oakland Civic Club, may be carried out on a larger scale and that the activities mentioned above may receive the county's able support.

Art Memory Contests.

Some months ago the Rural News-Letter, a publication issued by the U. S. Bureau of Education, called attention to a music memory contest conducted among rural schools in the State by the College of Education of the University of Minnesota. A recent circular from the State Department of Education of Washington announces an art memory contest for schools in that State conducted this school year by the State Federation of Women's Clubs. Two prizes are offered, one to the grade school having eight grades or township school having eight elementary grades and a high school in one building which first reports 100 per cent of its pupils are able to recognize and name the creators of 50 selected paintings; the other to the country school that first sends in a list of pupils who recognize the same list of paintings. This list of 50 pictures with names of the artists is furnished by the Federated Clubs. The pictures to be studied must be purchased by the schools or pupils. The prizes offered are described in the circular as "lovely prints suitable for hanging in the school." It is probable that this idea sponsored in the State of Washingotn will spread to other States and will be instrumental in increasing a knowledge of good pictures among school children as well as in enabling schools to secure standard prints to hang on the school walls. The pleasure given by such prints hanging in the school room is not confined to the teacher and the children. Parents and other visitors who come to the school may also enjoy them throughout the school year.

DISTURBED SLEEP

Caused From Bladder Irritation Is Nature's Signal of "Danger Ahead"

Joseph Dow, R. 55, Trenton, N. J., says: "My rest at night was disturbed 10 to 20 times. Lithiated Buchu has reduced this and entirely relieved me of that terrible burning and smarting. I was told there was no help for me. I want others to know and will tell or write my experience."

Lithiated Buchu is not a patent medicine. The formula is on the package. It acts on the bladder as epsom salts do on the bowels. Drives out abnormal deposits, lessens excessive acids, thereby relieving the irritation which causes "disturbed sleep." Keller Laboratory, Mechanicsburg, O. Sold at all drug stores. Locally at Gender's Pharmacy.—Advertisement.

NORTHWESTERN PIKE WILL BE FISRT TO BE MARKED

Durable Signs Have Been Made To Place Along Route Every Few Miles In West Virginia

Handsme, durable signs, made in West Virginia at the automobile license tag plant at Nitro, have arrived in Parkersburg, and maintenance forces of the State Road Commission, under the direction of Major H. E. Snyder will erect the signs on every highway leading out of Parkersburg.

These signs are of the kind recommended for use on all state highways by the American Association of State Highway Officials and it is hoped by officials in the State to have every State highway equipped with the uniform direction signs.

All of the federal highways leading from and through Parkersburg will be marked first. Federal highways will be marked with a large white enameled shield, similar to the shield in the official seal of the United States. Lettering is in black enamel and designates first of all the State of "W. Va." at the top and underneath in slightly smaller letters, "U. S.", meaning the road is a federal highway. The only other lettering is the number of the highway.

Signs marking State highways are rectangles, the longer sides parallel to the supporting posts. These signs used to mark State highways only, also are of white background with black lettering and containing only the letters "W. Va.", with the highway number. By use of these signs at intervals of several miles apart, motorists are able to keep on the main roads, avoiding side roads. These two types of signs are the only ones to be used in highway designation. Other devices will include the marking of telegraph and telephone posts thru cities with the official colors, black and white, with the letters indicating State or federal highway, with the number.

Work on painting the poles in Parkersburg to indicate State Route No. 21 also a federal route, and the Northwestern Pike, a federal route, will be one of the first projects of the road marking gang, and these two highways will be the first to be equipped with official markers. Favorable conditions of the weather will allow early completion of the work, State road officials stated.

Marking of highways, Major Snyder said, is secondary in importance only to building them. Without proper marking, he declared, a good road is a poor one because it cannot be used to its greatest degree without being marked. State Route No. 21, which is also a federal route from north to south, and the Northwestern Pike, being the most traveled and best improved roads from and through Parkersburg, work on installation of signs on these roads will be completed as soon as possible.

OFFICERS RAID HOUSES OF TWO DODSON FOREIGNERS

Where Four Barrels of Mash Are Found and Destroyed —Trial In Cumberland

While engaged in the search over the mountains in the vicinity of Dodson for the slayer of Harry Harris last Sunday afternoon, Sheriff Yutzy and Deputy Sheriff Casteel visited the homes of numerous foreigners with the expectation of finding Carado, the alleged murderer. Among the houses visited in Dodson were those of John Patrick and Louis Capatza, both of whom are miners employed in the Upper Potomac field.

In Patrick's house the officers found and destroyed a barrel of whiskey mash and at the house occupied by Capatza three barrels of mash were discovered and destroyed.

The men were not at home at the time the visits were made by the officers, hence no arrests could be made, but they have since been apprehended and will be given trials before the Federal Court when it meets in Cumberland.

Sent to State Hospital.

Snyder Frantz, of Oakland, was committed to the State hospital at Sykesville one day last week where he will receive treatment. For some time past he has been at the home of his mother here, having returned from a point over in Pennsylvania where he lived for several years.

SEVEN DEAD OF "WHITE PLAGUE IN GARRETT IN '25

With a Total of 1890 Deaths In the Entire State

Seven deaths in this county and a total of 1890 deaths in the State of Maryland was the 1925 harvest of the "White Plague", tuberculosis. These figures recently issued by the Bureau of Statistics of the State Health Department, indicate that although there has been a decline in the death rate from Tuberculosis, the disease is far from being under control. It still reigns as the leading cause of death between the ages of twenty and thirty-five, which are the years of greatest productivity and economic value.

Funds obtained from the sale of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals are used each year to combat this terrible scourge. Seventy percent of all county returns will remain in this county to finance county health work. Five percent will be sent to the National Tuberculosis Association to assist in the nation-wide fight. Twenty-five percent will be sent to the State Association to help pay for supplies, and services rendered. This twenty-five percent in no way compensates for the health services given this county by the State Association, including nursing service, the "Miracle House", and the regular monthly Tuberculosis Clinics.

The Tuberculosis clinics which have been held throughout the State for three years have rendered the residents of this county a distinct service. Known cases and suspected cases have an opportunity to receive expert diagnosis. This is done only with the consent of the patients' physicians and in direct cooperation with the local and State health authorities.

Tuberculosis Christmas Seals are stickers for health. Stick them on your mail and Christmas packages, and they will stick until they get there.

COUNTY AGENT JESTER'S SUCCESSOR IN OAKLAND

And Will Assume Duties of Office Immediately.

Dr. T. B. Symons, Director of Extension Service, University of Maryland, was in Oakland Monday for the purpose of conferring with the Board of County Commissioners in relation to the appointment of a County Agent to succeed Mr. W. C. Jester, who has submitted his resignation to take effect December 31, 1926. After a conference with the board Dr. Symons announced that he regretted very much to have Mr. Jester leave the service and he wished him abundant success in his new field of labor.

Dr. Symons announced the appointment of Mr. J. L. McGlone to serve as the new County Agent. Mr. McGlone accompanied Dr. Symons to Oakland and will immediately enter upon his duties in serving the farming interests of Garrett County.

Mr. McGlone is a graduate of the University of Maryland, specializing in the animal husbandry courses. He was president of the student body of the University of Maryland, indicating his ability as a leader. He has served as assistant County Agent in Frederick County and assisted the service in Fair exhibits over the state. He is a man of mature years and served in the World War with the 107 Mobile Veterinary Corp, 29 Division.

"I believe," stated Dr. Symons, "that Mr. McGlone will carry forward successfully the extension service work now so well started by Mr. Jester and Miss Lola Belle Green, Home Demonstration agent."

The chairman, Mr. George Browning, and the Associate Commissioners assured Dr. Symons that they would extend every cooperation with Mr. McGlone in developing the Agricultural Services of the County.

Every schoolboy who has read American history knows that the United States is not a military nation. With one possible exception, our struggle against Mexico, we have only resorted to war as a last resort, and after every other means of settlement had been found inadequate. And everyone knows that there is no military spirit in the United States today —probably less desire for war than there has ever been in the history of the country. But there is some difference between disliking war and lying down, oxlike, without defense of any kind, as a sort of general invitation for any country which might seek to molest us for one reason or another.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO R. R. NEARING CENTURY MARK

On Christmas Eve, 1852, Line Was Completed From Baltimore to Wheeling, W. Va.

This will be the ninety-ninth Christmas of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and on New Year's Day the company will be nearing the completion of the first century of its existence since the charter granted by the State of Maryland, Feb. 28, 1827.

Baltimore and Ohio history always carries a sentimental as well as business interest, because it concerns the first railroad built in the United States. Charles Carroll, last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, laid the first rail on this road July 4, 1828. He declared it an event "second to that of signing the Declaration of Independence, if even second to that."

The B. & O. began business in 1830, using horsepower and "even sails" at the beginning. In 1831 steam power was adopted, a locomotive imported from England in 1829 having demonstrated its superiority to all other motive power then known. It was not until 1840 that New York and Philadelphia were connected by rail, nor until 1854 that the first railroad penetrated to the east bank of the Mississippi. That was the Chicago & Rock Island road.

Hazardous At First.

Like all advances in methods of transportation, the railroads were regarded by the public at first as highly hazardous for passenger travel, and so indeed they were for many years until construction was strengthened and the management of trains systematized. Terrible accidents—collisions, collapse of trestles, leaving the tracks—shocked the public.

By 1838 the Baltimore & Ohio had pushed west from Baltimore to Frederick, Md., about one-third the distance to Cumberland, at the foot of the Allegany mountains. In the biography of Joshua R. Giddings, then a distinguished Ohio congressman, his journal is quoted by his biographer at a point where he describes his first railroad ride to Washington. With him on that trip were the son of Davy Crockett, Senator Smith, Indiana, and the famous Tom Corwin.

"About 11 o'clock," wrote Mr. Giddings, "about 120 passengers, seated in three cars, carrying from 40 to 60 passengers each, started upon the Baltimore & Ohio railroad for Washington. The cars were well carpeted and the seats cushioned. We had also a stove in each car, which rendered them comfortably warm. Thus seated —some conversing in groups, others reading newspapers, and some, from loss of sleep in traveling, sleeping in their seats—we were swept along at the rate of 15 miles an hour. At the usual time our candles were lighted, and we presented the appearance of three drawing rooms filled with guests traveling over land."

Finished on Christmas Eve.

The object of the Baltimore and Ohio's creation, as stipulated in the charter, namely, "to construct two or more sets of rails from Baltimore to the Ohio river," was realized on the eve of Christmas, 1852. On that day the golden spike completing the line from Baltimore to Wheeling, a distance of 379 miles, was driven at Rosby's Rock, W. Va., 18 miles southeast of Wheeling. Rosby's Rock was the point at which the two construction gangs met, one working east and the other west. One week later, on New Year's Day, 1853, the first train from the eastern terminal at Baltimore to the Ohio River, arrived in Wheeling. The event was made the occasion for a great celebration in the West Virginia metropolis, the guests including many public officials of the State and nation.

Old Landmark Destroyed.

One of Grantsville's old landmarks has been torn down and recently replaced with a neat little building to be used for a cobbler shop. The old building that was demolished was erected by Adam Shultz in 1820. It was used for a school house, granary, office and various other purposes until purchased by the late Daniel Smouse, from whom ownership passed to his son, Mortimer A. Smouse, who conducted a shoe making shop in it a long time before he destroyed it on account of its dilapidated condition. The new building erected in its place greatly adds to the appearance of the down town section of town, and will be more comfortable for Mr. Smouse as he industriously works at his trade of [illegible]

HARRIS, KITZMILLER COAL MINER, SHOT TO DEATH

Charles Carado, Italian, and a Miner Also, Accused of Crime, Who Eludes Officers and Posse

Harry Harris, aged 23 years, and employed as a miner by the Boyd Mining Company at Kitzmiller, Garrett county, was shot and died almost instantly early Sunday morning by Charles Carado, an Italian, and an employe of the Hamill Coal Mining Company, also operating at Kitzmiller, following a quarrel, said to be over an old grudge, in a restaurant operated by a man named Keller at Kitzmiller.

Carado, following the shooting, made his escape and has not been apprehended, his disappearance so quickly give the officers of the State grounds for the belief that he was aided in making his escape by a number of fellow-countrymen who are also employed at Kitzmiller.

Carado, it is said, placed the revolver with which he did the killing against Harris' breast and pulling the trigger of the fire arm shot him down in cold blood. One of the witnesses of the crime stated that while the quarrel had its fatal culmination outside the restaurant, the two men had had words before they entered it. Carado left the eating place for half an hour, apparently to get the revolver at his shanty, and upon returning he invited Harris to the street. Reaching the pavement fronting the restaurant, Carado whipped the revolver from his pocket and as he did so Harris attempted to disarm him. The Italian then placed the gun against Harris' breast and fired the charge. Harris, mortally wounded, crumpled to the snow-covered pavement.

Carried into the restaurant by Carl Campbell, storekeeper for the Boyd Mining Company, and William Helmick, another miner, Harris declared: "I believe he got me; my God, I'm shot." He died a few moments later.

Both men are said to have been intoxicated, which fact is attributed to the renewal of the quarrel over the grudge existing between them.

As soon as possible after the murder Sheriff Guy O. Yutzy was notified of the occurrence by telephone. The officer, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Wm. L. Casteel left immediately for the scene and the officers with a posse searched all day Sunday through the snow-covered mountains for the killer, believeing he was in hiding with those friendly to him. No trace of him was found. At his home the officers found a home-made stiletto, the weapon having a blade about ten or twelve inches long and fashioned from a file. Being unable to locate or to find a trace of Carado, the officers were led to believe that he escaped on a freight train that passed during the night and before their arrival at Kitzmiller. This theory was strengthened Monday when it was learned that Carado's clothing had been taken from his quarters by another Italian and shipped on a passenger train to Coalton, W. Va., a point on the Coal and Coke Railway south of Elkins.

Another report is that a man corresponding to the description given the officers of Carado had boarded a passenger train at Deer Park Sunday morning and had gone west through Oakland. Another report is that this morning Carado stepped off a train in Oakland which set the officers at work with renewed vigor. Neither of these reports have been verified, certainly not the latest one, since the man who did alight from a train here does not answer Carado's description in any particular.

Harris' friends at Kitzmiller were greatly incensed Sunday morning, and are yet, over his murder and threats of violence were heard on many sides.

Harris leaves a wife and child. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Willis Harris. Two brothers, Garland and Carl, and seven sisters, Elizabeth, Margaret, Lena, Bernadine, Develyn, Delores and Ruth Harris, also survive.

Harris was said to be of a quiet disposition and was a member of a well known family.

Carado had worked in the mines in and about Kitzmiller for seven years, having gone there upon his arrival in the United States from Italy. He is unmarried and is described as being about 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighing [illegible] pounds. When he disappeared following the slaying of Harris he wore a dark blue suit, a heavy light colored overcoat, a checkered sweater, light cap and tan shoes.

For his capture or any information leading thereto the County Commissioners of Garrett county have authorized Sheriff Yutzy to pay a reward of $200.

CHRISTIAN M. LIVENGOOD

The death at two o'clock Tuesday morning of Christian M. Livengood, Grantsville's oldest citizen and Civil War veteran, marked the passing of one highly esteemed and greatly respected by hosts of friends and acquaintances. The announcement of his death came as a surprise, even though he had been bedfast for more than five years, being totally blind and physically incapacitated following a stroke of paralysis. Early last week Mr. Livengood contracted a deep cold which resulted in grip. His mental faculties were not impaired, however, and he retained consciousness until a few hours before he passed away. He was born in Somerset county, Pa., on July 24, 1834, and was aged 92 years. He was one of the pioneer settlers of that portion of Pennsylvania where he was born and spent his boyhood days there. He enlisted in the Federal Army in 1862 and was attached to Co. I, 77th Infantry, later being transferred to the 22nd Pennsylvania Cavalry. At the close of the war he left Somerset county and went to Grantsville with a friend, Aaron Beachy, who purchased a farm a mile or two west of Grantsville, where he opened and operated a coal mine. In 1883 he married Miss Jennie Ulrich, of Jones Mills, Pa., and then purchased the National Hotel at Grantsville. Mr. and Mrs. Livengood conducted the hotel successfully for 22 years and as host and hostess of this stopping place they were noted for their kind hospitality. In 1905 the hotel was sold by Mr. Livengood and he then erected a beautiful home on the hill as one enters the town from the west. Mrs. Livengood died in February, 1923. Two sons, Frederick and John W., and a grandson, Paul, survive. Mr. Livengood was a staunch Republican of the old school. His interest in civic matters never lagged, notwithstanding his advanced years until he was forced to take to his bed. His funeral will occur this afternoon at two o'clock from his late home and will be conducted by the Rev. S. D. Sigler. Interment will be made in the family lot in the Grantsville cemetery.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to our many kind friends and neighbors for their generous acts of kindness and for floral tributes during the illness and after the death of our dear wife and mother.

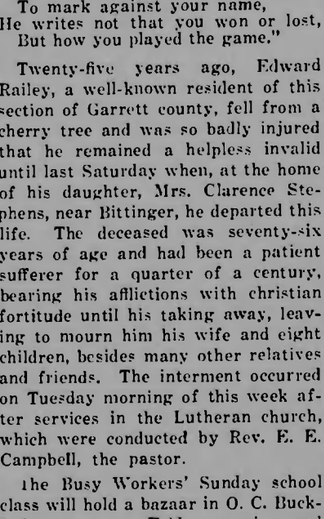
BITTINGER



"When the one great Scorer comes
To mark against your name,
He writes not that you won or lost,
But how you played the game."

Twenty-five years ago, Edward Railey, a well-known resident of this section of Garrett county, fell from a cherry tree and was so badly injured that he remained a helpless invalid until last Saturday when, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Clarence Stephens, near Bittinger, he departed this life. The deceased was seventy-six years of age and had been a patient sufferer for a quarter of a century, bearing his afflictions with christian fortitude until his taking away, leaving to mourn him his wife and eight children, besides many other relatives and friends. The interment occurred on Tuesday morning of this week after services in the Lutheran church, which were conducted by Rev. E. E. Campbell, the pastor.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially For The Republican's Readers by Rev. U. S. Wright, D.D.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1926.

THE BOY SAMUEL.

I Samuel, Chapters 1-3.

Speak, Jehovah, for thy servant heareth.—I Samuel 3:9.

IE COMING OF THE PROPHET.

Out of the hills a stream leaps in laughter and rainbow spray to settle into a wide stretch of water that scarce seems to move until it reaches the edge of the plain and leaps again into hurrying ripples. From Egypt to Palestine was rapid enough, but the period of the Judges showed small progress. Yet changes as vital as any in their history were taking place and one of these was the emergence of the prophet.

Eli was in charge of the Ark at Shiloh. He was priest, but seems to have no part in offering sacrifices. Elkannah slew his own ox. Gideon and Jephthah did the same. His sons do not seem to have performed that duty. Each worshipper sought the sacred spot and acted as chief offerer himself Eli was the keeper of the sacred symbol. It may have been a deified symbol in the mind of many. Certainly when taken to the battlefield it was regarded as the throne of the Eternal, who would be compelled to defend it, saving them while doing it. They could coerce God. Ritual took the place of religion, symbol replaced life and they found the Ark as satisfactory as any horse shoe or rabbit's foot for bringing good luck. The leaders at the front demanded its bringing, and Eli, good old soul, protested, but let it go. When the priests become the tool of politics God has small chance and religion is mostly whitewash. Detroit has had its battle to preserve its soul in recent days.

There emerged, however, a new figure, unique in its influence upon both Israel and upon religion, the figure of the prophet. He stood higher than priest or king and voiced the word of the Almighty. Responsible to none but God he became His mouthpiece and was as uncontrolled as Nathan by David and Elijah by Ahab. For while politics may build a church it can not create a prophet, and the stilling of that voce is a national disaster. A prophetless age is an age without profit. In gaining one, Israel became spiritually rich.

THE MAKING OF THE PROPHET.

No prophet is an accident. In the case of Samson, God chose the home but here the home chose God. God took the best He could find and out of its dedication a prophet came. One mother suffered the will of God, the other exulted in it. Small wonder that the child breathed easily upon the hills of God. His spirit was swaddled in intercession and bathed with prayer. His lullaby was the crooned story of his dedication and he knew himself as Jehovah's child before he could lisp his name. His will bowed to the authority of love and his hands knew the ministry of service. It was the home that gave inception to this setter up of kings and inaugurator of dynasties. And it was the sorrow of heart within it that cradled the child. All human defense was gone. Even the love of a husband who had taken a second wife only after there had been tears over a childless home could not protect her from the strife of tongues. She was driven to God. She fled to Him as her only resource and hid herself in Him care. Elkhannah, deeply religious himself, was far outstripped by her in intimacy with the Eternal Father. One may travel far before finding a prophet as the product of a Godless home. In this high day of opportunity and of peril there is no power that can so serve our day and our children as that which puts God before all other considerations and makes the home His shrine.

THE DEDICATION OF THE PROPHET.

Into that heart of Hannah came a great joy. Scorned for her childlessness, she gloried in the vindication of her righteousness by the coming of a baby boy. For the taunt that had smitten her hardest was that she was under the curse of God for some secret fault, some hidden stain, and to have this charge fall harmless was peace indeed. It had been bad enough to feel her own empty arms, while from that other tent came the lusty shouts of baby voices, but to hear that it was from some cherished betrayal of her husband was slow torture. No wonder she prayed as one who was drunk with the Spirit. Then the day came. God asked, God given, she could do no less than give to God for all his days, and it is no wonder that h ecaught the spirit that made the face above him radiant. When the years had passed that brought a second child and Samuel had passed his babyhood there was the procession to Shiloh in silence almost but with a heart of joy also that the gift of all gifts most fitting after God's goodness might be given to Him. She walked a very queen as she spoke to Eli and told her wondrous tale. The old man was thrilled by it and when she presented the boy so beautiful and strong, his heart overflowed also. It is a great day when the parent brings the child for dedication to the Church of God. In one church where the members were asked if they would dedicate a child to God's service if He should call, there was not one willing to make such a conditional offering. Our lack is dedicated boys and girls. When my own gray haired mother was told that her boy was to enter the ministry, she said: "I gave you to God the day you were born." So Samuel passed into the Church school where he learned much from the gentle old priest.

THE CALL OF THE PROPHET.

God stopped and called a child. It is the eternal wonder of the world always expectant that He will call an adult. And He does, but His best time is childhood. He may have been 12, and certainly he was in that straight-thinking period when black is black and white is white, with no gray between. The unrebuked sin of those days looked to the unspoiled heart of a child as it did to God Himself. Ought he to tell Eli? It might mean his dismissal from the House of God—an awful disgrace and distress for that idolized mother who had shaped the little coat he wore. Dared he do it? For he loved the old priest who had been so kind in taking his mother's place when he was so homesick for her that he could scarce see for tears. Yet the question refused to let him alone and it knew no lessening for the darkness. It is little wonder that he heard Eli call. Eagerly he ran to see what was wanted, only to be told to lie down again. Presently Eli, with a wonderful insight into a boy's heart, understool that God was trying to get speech with the boy and told him to listen and obey. What a night it was for Samuel. God came near and was known. And when day dawned the child knew that there was no way out except by doing what he believed was right at whatever cost, of hurt to loved Eli, of peril to his own hopes, of anguish to his mother; at no matter what cost he must speak. And when he crowned conscience king he found peace and knew that voice was God's own, speaking within his soul. That he followed it settled his prophethood and all Israel rejoiced and a new day was born for his land as it is born by every boy who puts God before all things else in his life.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE —OF— LOT OF GROUND AND FARM

In District No. 1, of Garrett County.

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage from Archibald Barnard and Daisy Barnard, his wife, to the undersigned, bearing date the 18th day of July, 1925, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 90, folio 443, etc., one of the Mortgage Records of Garrett County, Maryland, default having occurred in the same, I hereby give notice than on at the hour of 11:00 o'clock A. M., in front of the Court House in the town of Oakland, Maryland, I will offer at public sale to the highest bidder the following real estate, to-wit:

1. All of that lot of ground in the town of Swanton and on the south side of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, containing one quarter of an acre, which was conveyed to the said Archibald Barnard and Daisy Barnard by deed from S. F. Hamill dated April 13, 1921, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 80, folio 88, one of the Land Records of Garrett County.

2. All that part of the tract of land called "Modena," containing 50 acres, more or less, and being the same which was conveyed unto said Archibald Barnard by deed from Mae Taylor, dated December 24th, 1909, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 59, folio 522, etc., one of the said Land Records.

3. All that other lot of ground containing 57 acres, more or less, and being fully described in a deed therefor from George H. Mitchell and others to the said Daisy Barnard dated March 26th, 1910, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 59, folio 522, one of the said Land Records.

The last two mentioned parcels compose what is known as the Barnard farm and are located about four miles from Swanton and near North Glade.

TERMS OF SALE—Cash on the day of sale, as prescribed by said mortgage.

ERNEST RAY JONES, Mortgagee.

N. B.—More liberal terms may be obtained by any responsible purchaser of the above property by arrangement with the mortgagee. 41-4

NOTICE TO ALL DELINQUENT TAXPAYERS

This is to notify you that all delinquent taxes must be paid without further delay. So far I have been very lenient with you, but the State and the county are demanding collection of all delinquent taxes.

Changes in the assessments cannot be made by the Treasurer. If any assessment is incorrect the matter should be taken up with the County Commissioners.

A great many persons complain because their property is advertised for delinquent taxes and say they are put to a great deal of expense and humiliation on account of same. Remember if your property is advertised for delinquent taxes it is your fault and not the fault of the Treasurer. Pay up your taxes in full on or before the first day of January of each calendar year and your name will never appear on the delinquent list.

I want to be of the greatest service to you and help you all I can, but I can not help you much unless you try to help yourselves by being prompt in the payment of your taxes and giving me all the information you can.

Never allow more than one years taxes to be upon you at a time; if you have been in the habit of allowing your taxes to double up, be sure to get rid of that habit at once, as it is not fair to me nor best for yourself and cannot be permitted longer.

If you find anything wrong come in and see me and talk the matter over before complaining or mentioning it to others.

Yours very sincerely,
ALBERT L. LEE, Treasurer,
Garrett County, Md.

BUY!

The greatest gft is life, but man is not privileged to give that. However, the next greatest gift is health and that man can give by buying Christmas Seals again this year. If every man and woman will buy a few of the little health stamps the billion that must be sold this Christmas season will quickly be distributed and another year of effective warfare against the white plague will be assured.

The Christmas Seal is the standard of one of the most hopeful and dramatic fights ever made against disease. This fight is being made against one of the oldest plagues that have afflicted man. For thirty centuries the dread disease has gone steadily on, marking its victims and leaving them to a lingering death. The approach of the disease is so slow and gives so little warning that for many centuries no attempt was made to stamp it out or to prevent the spread of infection. Other plagues got in their devastating work so quickly and openly that man was moved to organize for self-protection and succeeded in wiping them out. Finally man launched his fight against the white plague and immediately began to gain ground.

It is estimated that tuberculosis in the United States wipes out a small-sized city every year. It is also estimated that to endure the disease in its present stage for the next thirty-five years would cost the nation twenty-six billion dollars. In the last twenty years education and sanitatoin have combined to cut the death rate from tuberculosis in two. Medical experts estimate that keeping the disease under control for thirty-five years will mean virtually exterminating it. Will the public give seven billions of dollars in the next thirty-five years to abolish tuberculosis or will it permit tuberculosis to take from it twenty-six billions of dollars and many thousands of lives? That is the challenge which the nation answers every Christmas.

INSPIRATION.

To put all of the emphasis on the value of an education is a mistake in so far as education without inspiration of valueless. Only when you include inspiration as an element of education or one of its by-products can you rate education above all other advantages. There are educated men, well read men and intelligent men who are of little value to themselves or society because they have not that divine spark of inspiration which puts education to work and without which education cannot work.

Education comes to man through reading, talking, listening and thinking. Inspiration comes with it thru the right kind of reading, the right kind of conversation and the deep and profound sort of thought. In other words, some literature conveys book learning and other literature proposes only to inspire the reader, to lift him out of his work-a-day stupor.

Unknown to many, the human mind, by proper impetus, is capable of kindling the divine spark of inspiration. There are many workmen who are stirring their creative ambitions by daily meditation on the ideals of their occupation and upon the vast possibilities lying dormant in their field of labor. No man ever suffered by imagining his job bigger that it really was. Of such imagining is inspiration made.

Inspiration hitched up to education or just plain knowledge is making men, communities, nations, business enterprises and all the great inventive, industrial and commercial marvels of the twentieth century.

"There can be no great and lasting work without inspiration," wrote Emerson.

State Forestry Plan Is Model.

Maryland leads all the States in the way it is teaching children the need of growing and conserving forest trees.

By hitting upon the idea of giving junior forestry commissions to boys willing to learn forestry it has started a plan which may develop into a league of children of the United States pledged to do their part in guarding our heritage of the trees.

Cecil county is the experimental ground for this junior forester movement of the State Department of Forestry of Maryland. Here the boys are being busily recruited for the army of woodsmen.

Maryland should be interested in forestry if for no other reason than that she imports 570,000,000 board feet of lumber every year to keep her industries going, while she has 350,000 acres within her borders standing idle, and that in 1925 she had 425 destructive forest fires.

Eligibility Required

According to the Maryland plan, the candidate for a commission as a junior forester must be 12 years of age or over and be in regular attendance at school. Commissions may be given, however, in exceptional cases, to boys who have left school and are working on farms. These boys must produce a certificate that they have successfully passed through the seventh grade.

A candidate must give evidence of his capacity as a leader in his school and in his community and of general helpfulness in his home life. This means that he must have a "fair" standing in school work, be actively interested in athletics and outdoor sports and have a certificate of good behavior and character signed by his parents, his teacher, his pastor and two farmers living in his own community.

Boys before being given commissions must be able to identify at least ten woodland trees, must know the forest laws, the name, location and telephone of the two nearest forest wardens and the way to fight forest fires.

Duties Outlined

They must agree to remove all unauthorized advertising signs from within the right of way of the roads for a distance of at least one mile between his home and school. And finally the boys must submit an essay of at least 150 words on the "Value of Trees to the Community and State."

Having received his commission, the junior forester will be expected to perform the following duties:

Be continually on the lookout, and particularly during the forest-fire season (March, April, May, October and November) for forest fires. He must report all fires to the nearest forest warden and to the farmers on whose land the fires are situated and attempt to put out all small fires himself.

He must call the attention of all people unlawfully destroying trees or shrubs to the law and if his warning is not heeded report to the forest warden and to the owner or tenant of the property the names of the trespassers, or the number of the automobile transporting them.

Junior foresters by showing an active interest in forestry will be contributing to one of the greatest organized movements of the age. Civilization is based upon an abundant supply of forest products. Our forests are being largely destroyed by poor management and forest fires. To fight these evils should certainly be an incentive and an honor to the boys and young men of Maryland.

Next Generation Benefits

"The State Department of Forestry of Maryland is leading a way for forestry education that will have a tremendous effect on the next generation," said Charles Lathrop Pack, president of the American Tree Association.

"As a feeder to American Forest Week, April 24 to 30, next year, Maryland has in her Junior Forester campaign a plan that should be worked out in every State.

"The American people must become forestry minded and the place to begin is where Maryland is beginnng. F. W. Besley, the State Forester, has put nearly 10,000 of our forestry primers into the schools. Teach the children forestry and we need not fear the future of our forests."

When the Indian roamed this country there were some eight hundred and twenty-two million acres of forested land. Much of this has been cut for farm and pasture, for cities and suburbs, as our population has grown.

It is estimated, according to Mr. Pack, that we now have one hundred and thirty-eight million acres of untouched forest and two hundred and fifty million acres of what is called second-growth timber of commercial value.

Acreage Standing Idle

About eighty-one million acres of land fit for nothing but growing trees are now idle. These acres should be put to work so that there may be a continued timber crop every year.

According to Dr. Raymond Pearl, of the Institute for Biological Research at Johns Hopkins, we probably shall have a population of three hundred million or more within a comparatively short time. That is almost three times what it is now. With the populaton going up hill and the forests going down hill, simple aritametic shows a result that may well mean economic disaster for this country.

Today, points out Mr. Pack, our greatest forest resources are long distances from the points of greatest need .Our centers of largest manufacture and densest population and, therefore, of most intense use, are in the Eastern half of the country.

Tremendous tracts of forest land in this section have been cleared to provide food-producing areas for this ever-increasing population. As a result there are no extensive forest areas near at hand.

Where Have Forests Gone?

Just where have our forests gone? Estimates show that we use, in one form or another, about 23,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood every year in this country. This means that about 230,000,000 trees of average size are cut from our forests every year, or trees that would cover 18,500 square miles, or an area equal to Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Jersey.

Forest fires, decay and insects destroy annually about 2,000,000,000 feet more. During 1924 forest fires swept 29,000,000 acres of private and public lands. Every year forest losses by fire are tremendous.

The railroads use about 130,000,000 new wood ties every year. There are about 3,000 ties under every mile of track. Each tie ordinarily lasts an average of eight years. We have to cut 3,000,000 trees every year to maintain telegraph and telephone wires.

School Lunches.

Mothers who are confronted with the problem of arranging nourishing appetizing lunches for their children to carry to school every day, will be interested in the plan described by Miss C. Ethel Monroe, Advisory Nurse of the State Department of Health, and that is being followed in a number of schools with much success.

"Every mother, every teacher and every public health nurse knowns," Miss Monroe said, "that one of the most effective ways of keeping the children at their best, both as to health and as to progress in school, is through the warm, nourishing luneh in the middle of the day. That and the midday rest are absolute necessities for the first graders and the very young children. But the warm lunch is just as important for the older boys and girls. The problem is how to go about getting it for the children who have to carry their lunch to school.

"In a number of schools the teachers are following a plan that was first tried out in some other States and that is working equally well here. Because of the difficulty of preparing food in the schools and of the cost of the necessary equipment and supplies, the children have been encouraged to bring food already cooked from home, carrying it in the widemouthed pint glas jar that is familiar to every housekeeper, and arrangements have been made for heating the food in the jar in which it is brought to school.

"All that is needed in the way of equipment for this purpose is an ordinary wash boiler, which is fitted with a double row of racks, the lower one elevated about two inches from the bottom of the boiler to prevent the jars from touching the water which just covers the bottom. Each child has his own jar, marked with his own name or number. When he reaches school in the morning, he places his jar with its supply of food in its place on one of the racks. During the morning recess, the teacher or one of the larger boys or girls places the boiler on the stove, and when the noon recess comes and the children have washed their hands in preparation for the meal, the food is warmed through and is ready for them to enjoy.

"Such things as vegetables, soups, meat and vegetable stews, cream soups, combinations of vegetables lend themselves readily to this plan. Bread and butter, an apple or some other fruit, or some simple cake furnish all the 'trimmings' necessary to complete the meal."

WHAT should be the most joyous and carefree season of the year is marred for many people by financial problems—the lack of a little extra money that is always needed at holiday time for gifts and other expenses.

Christmas Club members are not hampered by money worries. Just before the holidays they receive a check for a substantial amount of extra cash—enough for generous giving and for the special needs that Christmas brings.

FIRST COMMUNITY SALE IN OAKLAND GREAT SUCCESS

Notwithstanding Weather Conditions, Which Were Extremely Bad Throughout the Day

Oakland's first community sale day notwithstanding murky, disagreeable weather conditions which prevailed all day yesterday, was a success.

This assertion is vouched for by the fifty business men who entered into the compact to put on the sale which was advertised in The Republican last Thursday.

Every merchant entering into the affair agreed with every other merchant to do certain things and without exception faith was kept one with the other, with the result that in all probability another like sale will be carried on during the month of January, 1927.

Oakland was pretty well jammed with automobiles and humanity all day on Wednesday. The people came from all points of the compass to secure some of the bargains offered by the business men of town. They got what they came for and left Oakland in good humor with their purchases.

The stores were crowded the entire day and well on in the evening. Not only did the store keepers sell the advertised articles, but they sold hundreds of dollars worth of other goods, many of the visitors making their purchases for Christmas.

The House That Larry Built

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

NEARLY all the other teachers in Polly's school had gone abroad for the summer vacation, but Polly had bought a little roadster instead. And now it was nearly the first of September and she felt somehow as if she hadn't had quite such a satisfactory vacation as she had hoped.

Now she stood in Larry Blair's garage while a mechanic crept under her trim little car to see just why it was that the engine had begun to pound so hard that she had stopped here for help. An idle-looking young man waiting for his car was talking to the six-foot, gray-eyed man in overalls whom the others referred to as "boss."

"Nice house you're building next door," observed the waiting young man. "What's your idea?"

Polly's eyes suddenly met those of the gray-eyed young man. He smiled in a most friendly manner and Polly smiled back. "I don't know just what I shall do," said he. "If my girl'll have me, then I'll marry and settle down. But if my girl won't have me, then I'll sell it."

"Asked her?" queried the other.

"Not in so many words," returned Larry, the boss, "but—oh, she won't want me, so I won't need the house. What do you want to offer me for it?"

The idling one made no offer and the subject of conversation was changed. Just then the mechanic got out from under Polly's car and told her he thought everything was all right and she could pay the boss. She started to pay Larry.

"Wait," said Larry, handing back the money. "Maybe I'd better try that car myself." Larry was in the car and had driven it a few feet out of the garage when it stopped and appeared to jump. With difficulty Larry backed it into the garage. "There's something special that car needs," he said. "It won't cost any more—but it needs a new part."

Polly was distressed. "Dear me," she said, "I'm ten miles away from home."

"It happens that I am going along that way," said Larry. "Maybe you'd let me drive you home."

So it was that Polly drove ten miles over the highway with Larry. Larry never spent so much time on ten miles before in his life. He apologized, saying that there was something the matter with his car. "I don't mind in the least," said Polly. "I have been enjoying the scenery."

"So have I," said the bold Larry, looking into Polly's pretty face.

The next morning Larry brought back Polly's car.

"How are you going to get back?" Polly answered and Larry told her that he'd stand on the highway and get a lift from some truck or other. That is why she felt it was her real duty to take Larry back again to his garage.

"The scenery is even more beautiful to look at today than it was yesterday," said Larry. Then said Polly: "It will be very convenient for you, living there right beside your garage. The house is nearly done—you'll soon be moving in, I suppose."

"That depends on the girl," said Larry wistfully.

"I'm sure you and she ought to be very happy," sighed Polly. "That is to say—the house looks so convenient, and I'm sure it would be very nice living so near one's place of business. I cannot imagine a girl changing her mind after she had once given you her word, or at least made you think she'd marry you. You see I overheard what you were telling that man in the garage yesterday."

"Is that so?" exclaimed Larry. "Well, I oughtn't to be so careless about how I tell secrets." They had reached the garage and Larry could think of no excuse to detain the little school teacher. But the teacher detained herself.

"You don't mind my looking through the house," she asked. "I'm so fond of new houses."

Larry insisted on accompanying her. "It is a neat little place, isn't it?" he said, looking down at Polly as they stood in the middle of the perfectly equipped little kitchen. "But I'm not going to let the girl I marry wear herself out working. I'm going to keep a cook for her."

"If she really loved you she wouldn't mind cooking for you," said Polly.

"If she didn't really love me!" repeated Larry, looking sadly about. "How I wish I knew!"

"Why don't you ask her?" ventured Polly, and then the realization that this big man, Larry, was trying to make love to her came rushing upon her. She didn't have time to think it all out—whether it would be possible for her—well-bred school teacher—to marry a man who begrimed his hands with the grease of automobiles. But when Larry went toward her with pleading, outstretched arms she met him half way.

"But, Larry," she said, looking up to him as he held her, "I don't like to feel that I've taken some other girl's place."

"You don't suppose there ever was any other girl," accused Larry. "I liked—liked you a lot—first time I saw you. I was building this house for speculation—but when I saw you standing there and the question came up, I felt possessed to say what I did—and you know there wasn't anything more the matter with your car. I just said there was to get an excuse to take you home."

Her Garden of Dreams

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

THE family laughed at Joan's garden—they called it Joan's garden of dreams," and they teased her about it in a kindly way. They all loved it and sat in it when they could, but Joan Worth was the one who loved it best, who worked in it, and dreamed over it, always seeing beauty in it at any season of the year.

"Joan's children have gone to bed under a white blanket," smiled Mrs. Worth when the first snow came. The others looked out, seeing the arbor a great hump of snow, and garden benches misshapen oblongs. Every bush and vine wore a bridal veil of white, or sparkled with icy diamond drops. The sun shone wanly.

"Well, Joan, my dear," said Nan briskly, "what has your garden to offer today? A bouquet of icicles?"

Joan looked out of the window—"I believe I can get a winter bonquet—there are some dried cleomtis seeds and downy fluff, the barberry bushes are full and red."

"Is there any romance in your garden of dreams?" asked Nan gently. Joan's thin face flushed and her eyes were very soft.

"I am sure it must flower there, Nan! You remember your Stephen used to sit there with you—" she smiled as Nan looked down at her engagement ring.

"That is true," said Nan softly. "Stephen always said the garden had a great deal to do with his courtship! But, my dear girl, I am not talking about us; I am speaking about a romance for you in your garden! Are you sure there is not a root somewhere?"

Joan laughed. "There's 'love in a mist'—and 'love lies bleeding,' and bride roses," she said mischievously.

Nan looked up shrewdly. "Those flowers are all asleep—like you, Joan Worth!" she declared, and stopped teasing Joan. She felt sorry for her younger sister who was so timid and retiring that only a very bold and persistent lover could win her love. "And where is such a man?" Nan asked herself—"Stephen was the last eligible man in Little River—" And then she thought of Stephen's cousin, Mark Raymond—she had only met him once but he was a large, blond young man with an aggressive nose and chin and persistent blue eyes. "I must ask Stephen to bring him over the next time Mark comes to Little River," she thought, and planned some pretty frocks for the unsuspecting Joan.

The afternoon that Stephen brought Mark Raymond was a Saturday half-holiday. Nan had persuaded Joan to wear a vivid orange flannel frock which made the girl look like some brilliant-plumaged bird. Donning an old russet cloak, she prowled around the garden, seeing it sometimes as it would be when the first buds pushed through.

She was planning the garden for another summer, when a quiet voice spoke. "Any room for weeds in your garden, Miss Joan?" She turned quickly to meet the admiring eyes of Mark Raymond—she had not seen him for several years—she had been a small girl then at her first grown-up dance, and Mark had taken pity on her mortification at being a wallflower, and had given her the most delightful evening of her quiet life. She was glad to see him.

"There is always room for friendly weeds, Mr. Raymond," she said. "I will have to explain—right along here is the place where my dahlias stand, all in a row like soldiers, and as I raised them all myself for several years, I have named the different varieties after the twelve disciples—see the stakes with the labels?"

Mark went down the row, glancing at the labels—he read them aloud, "Matthew, Mark, Luke, John—" and so on. "So I am not a weed after all," said Mark Raymond. "I am a nice dahlia in a lady's garden!"

"You are named for a saint," said Joan primly.

"Of course, I am only a humble namesake," he said meekly, his blue eyes never leaving her vivid face, wondering why he had ever called this child plain! "Seems only last week that you and I had our famous evening at the charity ball," he went on.

"It is ten years ago," Joan said, and when he did not answer she looked up to find him regarding her with the queerest expression—mingled admiration, wonder, amazement, as if he had just discovered a great treasure. Perhaps he had—for Joan was twenty-two, and the sweetest girl he had ever seen. What had he been doing all those years while she was growing up? Perhaps she was engaged, as well as Nan! He must find out. His aggressive chin was not there for nothing at all! "So it is you that are engaged to old Steve," he murmured mendaciously.

"Mercy no," said Joan briskly, "It is Nan—and we must go in now and have some tea."

They came up the garden path together, talking, and Nan, waiting for them, turned away from the window, while Stephen stirred the fire. "How about it?" asked Stephen, grinning.

"It will be all right—I saw his eyes—we will have a double wedding, Steve!"

"In the rose garden," added Stephen.

Hope and Window Decorations

By JOHN EVANS

"IT'S exactly what I've always wanted to do," exclaimed Hope Chandler when she had been called to the office of the department store where she had been working. The manager had offered her an opportunity to try her hand at window decorating.

"You show some aptitude in that line and we like to give our employees a chance in their own direction. It is better for us—and better for you," said the manager.

The beginners in this line were usually given a chance to try their ability on the small windows that faced the underground arcade leading from one street to another.

"I'm going to do a perfume window tomorrow," she cried, gladly, to one of her co-workers.

"Oh—for the big drug sale?" asked her friend. "Great! Step on it, kid. You're coming on, all right."

She worked hard on the window that would display all the varieties of perfume that the shop was to have on sale. She laughed at the silly names on the fragrant powders and essences and yet she knew that in the marketing of this kind of ware there was much in a name. "Kiss Me" and "Flowers of Love" sold by their names, no doubt.

She was arranging a pyramid of ornately formed bottles in a lower corner of the window when the top bottle tumbled off its precarious perch. Fortunately, it did not break, but it tapped rather sharply the plate-glass pane.

"Dear me—how lucky!" breathed Hope as she bent to see if the pane had been scratched.

As she did so, she observed, for the first time, the slender figure of a young man dressing a window opposite her in the narrow tunneled passageway. He had heard the knock on the glass and was looking at her. He, too, had seen Hope for the first time.

Hope was embarrassed. Did he think she had tapped at the window to attract his attention? She continued her work with only an occasional surreptitious glance at the man in the window. She had seen enough of his face to know she liked him.

He was arranging cigars, cigarettes, tubes, pipes, ash trays. Hope had never seen him in the store. She wondered who he was.

That night when she left the shop she saw him swinging along the street. She liked him the more for his easy, graceful manner of moving.

The next morning she looked at his window. It was as artistic as anyone could have made it and there was something about the colorful schemes in which he had arranged the slender cigarette holders with the trays that matched them that gave the casual eye a sense of harmony. Hope decided that the young man was an artist.

Without seeming pointed in her purpose, she inquired about some of the other window dressers.

"Oh—you know we are having a good deal of work done just now by students from the commercial art school uptown. They want the practical experience and we—well, we get it done free, gratis, for nothing," a fellow worker told her. "The lad that did the cigar window yesterday in the subway store is one of them. Notice it?"

Nearly a month later she was standing looking at the first outside window she had ever been assigned to. She had put a great deal of thought and effort on it and had raised the shade on a stunning rainbow window of silks arranged according to the new science of color. It was an original idea. She had taken groups of colors from a book on this subject and had made charts in the window and labeled them as such so that passersby might choose and study their own colors, their influence, vibrations, etc. The window was attracting much attention.

"Pardon me," said a voice at her elbow.

"O—" said Hope, looking up into the face of the young artist.

"I must congratulate you on this window," he was saying. "I have asked about it from the management and they told me you were outside, now, they believed and they gave me permission to tell you in person."

"You—you like it?" asked Hope, timidly.

"It's splendid, both in conception and execution," he said.

Hope was adding admiration for his deep, rich tones to the already sufficiently large list of things she liked about this man.

"I am a director in a commercial art school and am, therefore, perhaps, not an ordinary judge of such work. I do an occasional window just to demonstrate to the students that it is an absorbing profession and one that is far from insignificant—even in its early stages."

"Yes—I saw you in the subway windows, did I not? I had dropped a perfume bottle and it tapped the glass. I—"

"Yes—I knew you were embarrassed because you thought I believed you had done it deliberately."

Then they both laughed.

It was not three months later that they admitted to each other that that perfume bottle, toppling from its pinnacle, had been merely an instrument of fate tipping to them both to [illegible] notice.

In the Old Wooden Chests

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

MARINA WOOLET was climbing, not to seek her fortune, but to see it, her head high-held, her heels tapping defiance upon the rather creaky stairs. Three broad flights, weaving back and forth the long hall which, despite its plundering, attested that in the happy long ago, Wooleton had ranked with the best houses of the countryside.

The third stair-head opened into what had been the ballroom, now known contemptuously as the garret. Windowed at each end, it was too airy to be musty, though dust grated under foot, lying thick upon a fine oaken floor which had oddly escaped the general despoiling. The current Woolet, a mild, gnileless person, had been tempted by oil stock into mortgage-ruin—and had escaped it solely through the virtue of the antique craze, which had made walnut wainscoat, richly carved doors and mantels, marvelous walnut doors, and handrails cut from single trunks a hundred years back, worth money enough to pay the debt, provide substitute of machine-wrought deals, and even mend the roof.

So Marina should have been grateful to the enterprising contractor, instead of loathing him whole-heartedly. She had excuse enough—in four mighty unhappy years, because of a stepmother so deadly pious she was quite insufferable. Worse yet—she had given her meek husband twin sons—to inherit the land, under entail, should it remain heritable. Hence Marina's portion was her legacy from Granny—her father's grandmother, who, at rising ninety, had died of heart-break over the old house's despoiling.

She had willed to Marina, her namesake, sundry wooden chests, a cowhide trunk, a bandbox, along with a wooden box, stoutly nailed, yet giving forth fragrance, faint, subtle, tantalizing. Stepmother had been wild to see inside everything—Marina wouldn't have it—not a key should turn, not a lid lift, until she was good and ready. That happened to be this bright June morning, when she knew the family was headed for Aunt Sooky-Car'lines to stay until moon-up.

Flinging back the dust-cover from the huddle of cubes beneath, she fell upon the bandbox with trembling fingers—and shortly drew from it a bonnet of rich pink velvet, its flaring scoop-brim wreathed with a magnificent white plume.

Merely the beginning this. The smaller chest, the cowhide trunk, most of all the nailed-up casket gave out such marvels Marina stood dazed. Frocks of satin, a big double scarlet crepe shawl with roses all around it and half-yard fringe, a cloth pelisse, lined with swan's down, and at the bottom a jewel case filled not with pearls and diamonds, but corals, red, pink and white, yards on yards of heavy gold chain, filigree necklaces and bandeaux, cameos, set and unset.

Stockings—a bagful, many home-knit, even in silk, shoes as various, undergarments, miracles of fine sewing, yet so ample they made Marina smile. But she fell for the stays of white satin brocade. Impetuously she tried them—next she endued herself with a frilly petticoat, a sweeping velvet frock, put her feet in scarlet slippers, flung the scarlet shawl over her shoulders, and crowned herself with the plumed pink bonnet.

Then—to see herself was imperative—there was still a pier-glass that had cracked in the effort to move it—she raced downstairs to it, had but just surveyed herself fully in it, when, without knocking the door opened, and a man's voice cried: "Good Lord! Are you flesh and blood—or just a vision?"

It was Clem Dabney's voice—he had supervised all those heart-breaking removals—wherefore unreasonably Marina had so hated him, she hardly looked at him as she asked loftily: "Are you on another plunder-hunt? If you are—run along."

"Shan't I That's just my business." Clem said: "Listen, Marina!"

"Miss Woolet, please!"

He shook his head at her violently, running on: "I came for pleasure, profit, and to ease my conscience—ever since that cruel stripping, I've been haunted by—you and Granny. I've wanted so to make up for it—a little. Now I've got the chance. Here's the case—a manager who knows my firm, is risking thousands on a period play—he has given me carte blanche—so I came on the chance of finding here some things you'd spare us. Tell me, truly—are there any more where these came from?"

"Part of a carload—come and see them," Marina said, shrugging as she led him up the stairs. Her knees trembled—she was nearly voiceless. Not a thread would she sell him—if only she didn't so yearn to get away. It was Clem who drove the hard bargains that gave her five thousand dollars, for less than half her heritage.

But oddly enough some months later when wedding presents were in order, one of the costliest received by Mrs. Clem Dabney, born Woolet, came from Hilliard, the theatre man. It was a string of pearls—not long but perfect—and with them a note said: "We owe you much more than this, for your splendid help to us in showing these [illegible] splendor of olden

"Two of Us," She Signed

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

"NOW Sis, if you like that little bungalow we looked at in Glen Cove, I'm strong for taking it. You know, you need some real country air to sleep in since you're in a stuffy office all day—"

"But Polly, there will be lots more housekeeping and work for you in a place like that than in our tiny apartment."

"I should just love it. And even if a lot of the furniture is moth-eaten we can soon brighten it up. And I do think it's a bargain."

"It's a very good way of spending the small amount of money we have and we will at least have a home of our own," the elder sister said happily, and hugged little Polly. "You're a duck to take such good care of your big sister."

So they signed the deeds and became the owners of a truly charming little bungalow of timber and stucco with its furniture thrown in. There was one big airy living room, a nice bedroom, a tiny kitchen and bath. When Polly and Elsie stepped over the threshold with their few personal belongings and stood in the bungalow that was really their own, they almost wept on each other's necks, so glad were they to have a home to do exactly as they liked with and make cozy.

When Polly had decided that the rug in the bedroom should come up and be well beaten, she got down on her knees with her tools to pull out the tacks and discovered heaps of manuscript used as padding.

Polly had a queer feeling of something big happening in her housewifely day. For on the manuscripts, so as not to be overlooked, the writer had scribbled, "These stories are the property of whoever buys the bungalow. They're welcome. I've shopped them all over the country and, as you see, there are hundreds of printed return slips to help pad out the old rug, Jerry Westlake."

Polly burst out laughing, but a sharp little twinge of pity also gripped her heart. Jerry Westlake was the man from whom they had got the house, but they had not come in personal contact with him, the transaction being entirely through an agent.

The bravy side of Polly getting temporary mastery over the domestic, she stayed on the floor and read any number of the short stories. If they had been complete plills Polly would not have wasted her time on them, but they were not. The plots were fine, the writing poor and the characters badly drawn. It was no wonder the editors had been unable to use them.

Polly worked hard. During the long days alone in the bungalow she had plenty of time for concentration, and while her first effort did not meet with acceptance, her second did. It was comparatively easy after that. Polly might never have developed writing ability had she not penetrated immediately into the heart of Jerry's very fine plots. They had stirred her imagination and her brain.

She signed the stories "Two Of Us, and it was not until the first one was published that she told Elsie all about it. Then Polly wrote a letter to Jerry Westlake and wrapped a magazine with the story to post to him.

"Dear Mr. Westlake," wrote Polly, "If you have any more plots as good as the ones under the rug, please send them along by first mail. Several of the ones found have been accepted and I send along the first published as well as half the check. I could not possibly have written stories without the exciting plots, and hope you will continue collaborating with me." The letter was signed "Two of Us, this half being Polly Palmer."

The man on the step grinned. "I'm the other half, Jerry Westlake."

"Oh," exclaimed Polly, "how lovely." And as they two shook hands Polly ushered him into the bungalow that for so long had been his own home.

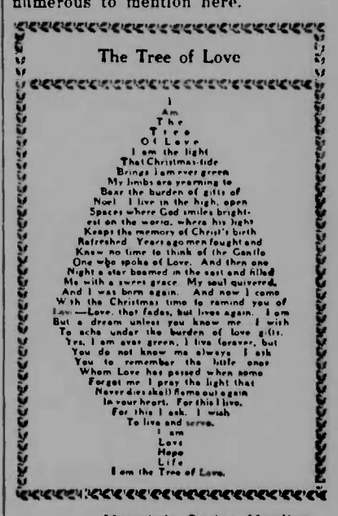
"What a difference a woman's taste makes," said Jerry and not without a shade of longing. "But what a peach you are with stories. I never thought of my old plot as working out so thrillingly. I've got heaps more jotted down."

"If we start talking plots now," laughed Polly, strangely very happy. "I won't have the supper ready for Sis, so I'll just set the table for three—you will stay, won't you?"

"I certainly will," said Jerry and they progressed so swiftly into the heart of harmony that when Elsie arrived home she found a strange man in the kitchen with Polly and round his big frame was an apron. He was very intent on making popovers while Polly, flushed and bright eyed, simmered a chicken and prepared a dainty salad for three.

Dolly flew into Elsie's arms with a breathlessness that told Elsie much more than words could have done, and she smiled happily. All of a sudden she knew that Polly had met the man to whom her faithful heart would cling for the rest of her life and Elsie was glad with a gladness that did not at first make her realize that now she could say the word to Donald Gray that he had been waiting for so long.

"The two halves of Two Of Us have met," said Polly, introducing Jerry, "and we seem to hit it off well—to-



THE STORY OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE

THOUSANDS OF HOLIDAY GREETINGS EXTENDED THROUGHOUT THE NATION OVER THE HUMMING WIRES

I am the spirit of Christmas. During the happy holiday season I am found in millions of homes where I make the old young, and the young happy, and lend color to the glad season of the year. I am the Christmas tree.

For years I have been growing shapely and symmetrically with the thought in mind that some Christmas I would be a part of the big things of life and do my share toward instilling happiness into the world. When I am properly decorated with tinsel, colored lights, a sprig of holly or mistle-toe here and there, not to mention wonderful presents, I am a thing of beauty that none can help but admire. But the sad feature of it all is that within a few days, a week at most, my beautiful plumage begins to droop, I wither and the ornaments are stripped from me, and all forlorn I am thrown on the trash-pile because I have no further value or usefulness.

There are many trees, companions with whom I have grown up in the forest, who are not nearly so shapely or attractive as I, who serve a more useful purpose. The stately oak, the long leaf pine, and the chestnut, all immediate neighbors, play an important part in the growth and development of every community. They not only make lumber which is used in office buildings and homes, but are used for many other purposes, too numerous to mention here.

—Mountain States Monitor.

The chestnut tree, which is found in the mountain ranges of the Blue Ridge and Alleghanies, supports the communication system of the country and plays an important part in lighting the way in the cities and towns of large areas of this country. If I could feel that I were going to be a part of things—important things like that—I would feel that I had not lived in vain.

A chestnut tree was my nearest neighbor in the forest grove, where we formed a real friendship.

A short time ago he was taken away and we separated forever. He too will be something useful, while I will be an ornament for a short time and then will be discarded.

One day a crew of men came into the woods and following along a path that led from the road into the forest, stopped at this tall, shapely chestnut tree, and after looking it over, decided that it would serve a useful purpose as a pole in one of the lines of the country's best known communication system. After sizing up the way the tree should fall, the big cross-cut saw began to bite into the bark and, as it cut deeper and deeper, it seemed to the chestnut tree to be the dirge of his dreams and to put an end to his hopes for all time to come.

Finally with a crash the tree fell headlong to the earth, and soon his limbs were clipped from his body by the clean strokes of axes in the strong hands of the woodsmen. Then the smooth, clinging bark was skinned away, leaving the tree a bare trunk that apparently could serve no useful purpose.

But soon the long white timber was loaded on a truck and hauled away from the mountain where it had grown and flourished. After miles of travel the tree, which was to become a pole, was set up in a line as a support for the "highways of speech" that extend north, south, east and west over the country and carry messages here, there and everywhere, day in and day out, year after year.

After being set in the line, linemen came along and gave the pole new arms to take the place of those that had been trimmed away by the woodsmen. Later these arms were covered with glass insulators, on which shining copper wires were placed. Over these wires messages are carried back and forth across the country.

Soon the pole heard the humming noises produced by the wind—sounds not unlike the strumming of the strings on a gigantic harp. Then it realized that it had become a part of the country's system of communication, and that at last it had reached its objective and would now serve a far more useful purpose than being one of the many trees of the forest.

BUSY B. & O. RAILROAD PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

To Nation's Congress of 4-H Boys and Girls in Chicago. Friday, December 2.

Mr. Daniel Willard, who is president of the great Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, which is conceded to be the best equipped system and best managed road extending from the east into the middle west, is one of the nation's busiest men, but he was not too much occupied with his railroad interests last Friday to make the trip from Baltimore to Chicago in order to make a heartening address to the boys and girls composing the National 4-H Club Congress, assembled at Hotel LaSalle in Chicago.

Mr. Willard's address to the youthful farmers was intensely interesting and was based upon personal experiences, for Mr. Willard was a farm boy up in the New England hills fifty years ago. His address was such as to attract the attention of the daily press, not only of Chicago, but of the entire country. The Republican is privileged to reproduce Mr. Willard's remarks in full upon the occasion. He said:

"I felt much honored and a real sense of pleasure when I was invited by Mr. Nohle to address the members of the Boys and Girls Farm Clubs at their annual banquet here in Chicago, so much so in fact that I was glad to come 800 miles to keep my appointment. There are two, perhaps more, reasons why I was glad to come—first, because I was born and lived on a New England farm until I was eighteen years old, or about the average age, I should judge, of the boys and girls in this audience. Second, I know that the boys and girls who would be here were here because they had shown excellence and intelligent interest in some particular line of farm work, and might, therefore, be called a selected group; and last, perhaps, because I am now and always have been very much interested in farming, and when I say 'farming' I suppose I have in mind farming as I knew it in New England over fifty years ago.

"My father owned his farm of about 250 acres of woodland hills, pasture and meadow lands. He had, I suppose, about sixty or seventy acres of tillable land. He kept, when I was a boy, five or six cows, a yoke of oxen, ten or a dozen head of young cattle, including calves, two or three horses and sometimes 200 sheep, and of course hens, turkeys, guinea fowl, pigs, etc. As I was the only boy in our family, you can perhaps imagine how busy I could be, although no one who has not lived on such a farm can have any idea how many jobs there are on a farm that just seem to fit a boy from ten to fifteen years old. To enumerate just a few: It was my job to feed and water the horses and to clean out the stables; then I had to help feed the cows and cattle, and try to persuade one or more calves to drink milk from a pail. The hogs also had to be fed. I assisted in nearly all of these operations, which was called 'doing the chores,' and then there was one other job that was wholly mine. No one ever took it away from me and there was no one else that I could wish it upon. I refer, of course, to filling the wood-box in the kitchen It sometimes seemed to me that it had no bottom at all or that its bottom went clear down to the floor of the cellar.

"In springtime I had to ride horse to cultivate corn and potatoes and help make the garden. In haying-time I had to turn the grindstone while the mowing machine cutter was being ground and also the scythe. I also had to rake after the cart when the hay was being loaded in the field. We had no hay forks when I was a boy and so I had to mow away up under the roof in the barn. I don't suppose any of you boys know what is meant by 'mowing away,' but I know. The meanest job on the farm, so I thought, was picking up potatoes, but I liked to husk corn. There were many other jobs supposed to be a boy's size, such as going after the cows up in the pasture, washing the huggy (this was before the day of the automobile), sticking pumpkin seeds, pulling weeds in the garden, etc., etc.

"I own a New England farm now much like the one I have been telling you about, but the work is quite different. We now have a tractor as well as horses, and a milking machine and separator run by electricity.

"I forgot to mention churning. I had to turn the churn and we had one cow that I despised. It seemed as if her cream never would turn into butter, and it also seemed as if it was always time to churn when the weather was just right for fishing or sliding down hill. Churning was an all-the-year-round job.

"We farm better today than when I was a boy, but not as much better as we ought to. Our agricultural colleges, farmers' institutes, boys and girls clubs all in different ways furnish opportunities to obtain the best practical as well as scientific information concerning the most improved methods and practices for stock raising, soil treatment, care of poultry, fruit culture, etc. All information of the kind mentioned can now be had for the asking, and I shall not undertake to tell you young people anything about such things. There is one feature, however, about farm life in America which is seldom, if ever, referred to, although I can say from actual observation that it is quite general and almost typical throughout the United States.

"I refer to the appearance of carelessness and neglect which is so common on our farms throughout the length and breadth of our land. It has always been so; it was so when I was a boy; it is so still. Sometimes I think it is even worse now than was the case fifty years ago. I am obliged to travel a good deal in my business and I have excellent opportunity to observe. By neglect and carelessness I refer to such things as leaving wagons and farm machinery out in the fields or outside the barn or shed in all kinds of weather, permitting window panes to be missing, doors and gates off the hinges, fences out of order, piles of wood, lumber and stones around the buildings where they ought not to be, thereby giving the grounds a bad appearance; stumps and stones in a tillable field when they ought to be removed, piles of rubbish about the place that ought to be burned if of no value, and so on and so forth.

"I do not mean to say that all farms are bad in all ways I have mentioned, but my observation is that many of them are bad one or more ways and some are had in all ways. In short, our American farmers as a class are not good housekeepers—I mean, of course, the men folks—and bad housekeeping, whether outside or inside the house, is generally inexcusable from my point of view. Please understand that what I have just said is not intended to apply to the girls and women, because my observation convinces me that the farmer's wife and daughter usually take much better care of the inside of the house than is the case outside.

"Now, I know that the railroads, or some of them, are had housekeepers, and it is just as inexcusable for the railroads to be careless and neglectful as it is for the farmers. You will sometimes hear it said that it costs money to clean up and put things in the right place, and the farmers cannot afford to do so. I do not believe it. I am convinced that in the long run it actually pays in dollars and cents to keep picked up, but in any event we can afford and actually do afford to do some things not because they pay directly, but just because to do so gives us a certain worth while feeling of satisfaction. That is why men wear collars, have their hair cut and shave; and also why girls bob their hair, powder their nose, etc., not to go further into details. I am told that there was a rigidly enforced rule in our army during the World War which required all men in unifrom—officers and privates—to shave each day and to clean their clothes and equipment as soon as possible after a battle or hard march. It was believed that this course had a stimulating effect upon all the men and made them better soldiers. A farmer with a clean and well kept farm will stand up straighter and feel more satisfied with himself and his calling than would be the case if he followed, as so many do, the opposite course.

"As a matter of fact, many people get the impression that farmers as a class are shiftless and wasteful because of the things I have mentioned. There is no class of people in all the United States for whom I have greater respect than the farmers, and I am pained when I hear them unjustly criticised, but it cannot be denied that they are in part at least responsible for some criticism because of their indifference as a class concerning appearances.

I wish when you go home you would keep in mind what I have said about farm appearances. I also wish that, if you do not already have it, you would try to cultivate the habit of keeping all things picked up and in the right place, and that is really all there is to good housekeeping. The older generation may find it difficult to change fixed habits, but if the younger people would always be particular to put things that they have been using in the right place after they are done with them, I am confident that a very great improvement in appearances would gradually come about, and that too without the expenditure of any additional money, but just a little more time and effort perhaps at the first. A real economy of time and effort would come eventually, just by not having to waste time hunting for a tool or appliance every time it is wanted. Our homes and farms would look so much nicer and more attractive if we would only keep them picked up. I hope you will use your influence to that end.

"I suppose that inasmuch as I am a railroad president you may expect me to say something about the railroads. There is much that I might say but little that I am going to say. I am not going to tell you how many locomotives and cars are owned by the railroads, although I could tell you both if you should ask me, but you can get all such information elsewhere, particularly in the published reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and of the American Railway Association.

"Our country is one of the largest and best in the world, and we also have the largest and best railway system in the world. The railroad mileage in the United States alone is more than one-third of all the railroad mileage in the entire world. The passenger fares in this country, by and large, compare favorably with such fares in other countries, and the freight rates in the United States as a whole are the lowest in the world except in some countries such as India, where wages and standards of living are very low, as well as the standard of service.

"There should be no feeling of antagonism between the railroads and the farmers. They are mutually essential to each other. Railroad men and officers, including presidents, are very much like other people but, being human, they have of course the defects of human nature. But farmers are also human and they have sometimes even been accused of putting the largest apples on top of the barrel they intended to offer for sale.

"Without the railroads, remote western farm lands would be as valueless today as they were before railroads were built. Without passengers and freight to carry, the railroads would be worthless. Railroads rates as a whole must be high enough to enable the roads to be reasonably prosperous, provided they are honestly and efficiently operated. If rates should be so high as to prevent traffic from moving, the railroads would be injured and not benefitted. The railroads are anxious to see the farmers prosperous; I know that I am. And unless the railroads are also reasonably prosperous, they will not be able to provide the facilities necessary when the farmers want to ship their grain and stock. If a farmer cannot get his stock and produce to market they are of little or no value to him.

"The Baltimore and Ohio Company has an agricultural department, and the head of that department is a graduate from an agricultural college besides being a real farmer. He and his three assistants devote their entire time to matters affecting the welfare of the farmers who live along the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. We have encouraged the use of lime on soil where tests showed it would be beneficial; we have encouraged the breeding of blooded stock and the raising of purebred fowls, and we have assisted in operating instruction trains for farmers along the Baltimore and Ohio line. We have done this because we believed that doing such things would tend to make the farmers along the Baltimore and Ohio more prosperous, and we know that prosperous farmers travel more and ship more freight than those who are not prosperous. The railroads and the farmers have much in common; they should be friends—they should be good neighbors.

"We who are so forutnate as to have our homes in the United States have much to feel thankful for. We live in one of the best and richest countries in all the world. I refer, of course, to its wealth of natural resources, such as good farm land, good climate, ample—almost unlimited—supply of coal, iron, copper, salt, timber, etc. We have a good form of government, and if at any time we have a poor administration, it is our own fault. We do not need to have a revolution in our country in order to change our public officers, or to improve the character of our public service; it is only necessary for us to go to the polls and vote. You will all soon reach the age when you will be entitled to vote under our laws. You have not only the right to vote when of voting age, but it is your duty as a citizen to do so. You should study the history of our country and acquaint yourselves with its policies and traditions. You should read about the doings of Congress and the State legislatures. You should read about the men who are in the public offices in your own State as well as about those who represent your State in Washington, and when you are old enough to vote, you should vote for the ones whose views and public record seem right to you. Only in this way—there is no other—can our country continue to be well governed and prosperous.

RECORDS SHOW MARYLANDERS ARE LONGER LIVED

Than They Were A Couple of Generations Ago.

Comparing the human machine, which is usually worked to its fullest capacity every day without more attention than is necessary to its inner works, to the automobile that is treated with so much more consideration, Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health, advises every grown-up to go to his family doctor for a complete going-over at least once a year; oftener, if necessary. And as this is the season in which the question of gifts looms large, he suggests that each individual who has not had such a checking-up recently, make a present of such a health examination, to himself, before the close of the holiday season.

"The records of the State Department of Health, show" Dr. Fulton said, "that our people in Maryland live ten to fifteen years longer than their grandparents did. But they also show that the greater number of our deaths are due, in the white population, to what we call the diseases of middle age—heart disease and other diseases of the circulatory system, diseases of the kidneys and cancer. In the colored population, tuberculosis has first place as a cause of death and after that come the diseases of middle age.

"In the majority of these diseases, early recognition of the menacing condition, with prompt treatment in some instances, or with greater attention to the rules of hygienic living in others, as directed by the family physician, would mean the prolonging of many lives for much longer periods of health and usefulness.

"Grown-ups are willing to call in a doctor after they are seriously ill, but they are slow to realize the importance of going to the doctor while they are apparently well in order that they may stay well. One of the duties of the State Department of Health is to protect the people of the counties of Maryland from the 'catching' diseases, as far as possible. And it works unceasingly toward that end. But when it comes to these conditions of middle age, the responsibility falls back upon the individual. All that the Department can do, is to urge every grown-up to go to his or her doctor for the same sort of checking up of the human machine that he or she has given at regular intervals to his or her car. Such an examination should be made at least once a year and oftener, if necessary.

"Fortunately for the younger generation, the medical inspection of boys and girls while in school or before they enter school, and of the babies at the 'well baby' conferences, is making the younger generation regard the regular health examination as a matter of course. It will be a habit with them by the time they are grown. It's the grown-ups who have to form the habit.

"Now that the gift season is approaching, I would like to urge everybody who has not been to his doctor recently for such a going-over, to have a health examination, as a gift to himself, before the close of the holiday season."

'A Family Affair'

The "telephone family" is truly what the name implies, since there are many family groups employed in this great service utility.

Sisters in the telephone company are more numerous simply because there are more girls employed, but the cases of fathers and sons or brothers are well represented in many of the offices throughout the country.

In the beginning there were four men engaged in the telephone business. They were Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor; Thomas A. Watson, the first telephone engineer; Gardiner G. Hubbard, lawyer and business manager, and Thomas Sanders, business man and the financier of the enterprise. From this small nucleus of telephone workers, in fifty years, the Bell System employees have grown into a great army. A census of Bell System employees, not including Western Electric employees, taken in December, 1925, showed that there were then 293,480 persons employed in the System.

Notwithstanding the rapid growth of the System, requiring the services of many new employees, the average length of service of all employees was nearly five years; more than 25 per cent. of the male employees have been with the company more than ten years, and about 4.3½ per cent. have served the Bell System more than five years.

But the average length of service does not seem any time at all to the 283 telephone veterans, still active, who were in the Bell Telephone service away back in 1885 when the Boston-New York telephone line was the greatest achievement in long distance transmission. They are the survivors of some 5700 employees who were employed at that time.

Ranking next in length of service were 1776 employees who had served the Bell System for thirty years or more, who have seen the System grow from approximately 300,000 telephones to more than 12,000,000 Bell-owned telephones. Another group of telephone employees in point of length of service is comprised of 9652 individuals who have twenty-one or more years of service to their credit. All are classed as pioneers and are eligible for membership in the Pioneers of America, a Bell System organization, national in scope, with local chapters, designed to preserve the traditions of the Bell System's founders and to inspire loyalty and devotion in the public service.

The fact that there are now 100,000 more employees on the Bell System payrolls than there were seven years ago is indicative of the growth of the System to meet the constantly increasing requirements of the public service.

CRIMINAL COURT SESSION CALLED MONDAY MORNING

Abductors of Mountain Lake Park Girls Given Five Years Each in State Penitentiary

Following the discharge of the grand jury last Thursday morning, the December Term of the Circuit Court recessed until Monday morning when it again convened with Judge Albert A. Doub on the bench who was joined yesterday by Judge Frank G. Wagaman.

With the convening of the term on Monday the criminal docket was called and cases disposed of as follows up to the time this paper goes to press:

Sam Polino, fined $25 by Justice Poole of Kitzmiller after being found guilty of being drunk and acting in a disoderly manner at Kitzmiller, appealed the case. When it was called Monday Polino failed to answer and the judgement of the lower court was affirmed.

In No. 3 criminal trials, Jake McRobie, on the charge of assault and battery, entered a plea of guilty and was fined 82o and costs.

Another appeal case from the verdict of guilty rendered by Justice Pool at Kitzmiller, was tha tof Benjamin Davis, who had been convicted of operating a motor vehicle whilst intoxicated. The matter was handled by the attorneys before a jury which brought in a verdict of guilty after an hour's deliberation. Sentence has not yet been imposed by the Court.

Rosso Onofaro, whose case was similar to that of Davis, elected to be tried before the Court, whose verdict was not guilty.

Following the disposition of cases on the criminal appeal docket, the criminal trials docket was called.

William Harmon and Zula Hinebaugh, who were arrested early in the summer as they were sampling a run of new liquor in a tent where they operated a still, was the first case tried. Harmon entered a plea of guilty as indicted, whereupon the case against Zula Hinebaugh was dismissed by the State. Sentence withheld.

The cases of R. J. Martin and Geo. E. Arthur, indicted for abducting Esther Zepp and Elva Kitzmiller, two young girls of Mountain Lake Park early in October of the present year, when arraigned on the charge entered pleas of guilty and were sentenced to serve five years each in the Maryland Penitentiary. The two girls will be taken to the Maryland School for Girls where they are to remain until they reach the age of 21 years. Martin and Arthur came to Oakland last fall with a carnival company and after the engagement was closed they remained in Oakland for about two weeks. In the meantime Martin married a woman who was attached to a show with the carnival, but deserted his wife the day following, leaving Oakland in company with Arthur and the two girls. They were captured at a point on the National Highway near Hancock by Sheriff Yutzy and a deputy and brought back to Oakland where they have been in jail pending their trial.

Charles Martin and Ray Martin, father and son, were tried before the Court upon an indictment charging them with the larceny of automobile accessories. Verdict held sub curia.

Hugh Maxwell Stewart confessed a plea of guilty upon being arraigned for bigamy. His sentence has not yet been imposed.

Toby Tyler, a colored man hailing from Washington, D. C., was sentenced to serve four years in the Maryland Penitentiary after he had entered a plea of guilty, the charge against him being robbery of an automibilist at a point near Keyser's Ridge on the National Highway. The negro's victim was a driver for the Studebaker Automobile Corporation which concern had a number of men engaged during the summer testing a fleet of cars between Uniontown and Grantsville. On the night of the robbery one of the cars went bad and the driver, while waiting for another of the cars to come to his relief, fell asleep. When the occupant of the car woke he was confronted with a revolver in the hands of Tyler who demanded his money and then left. The colored man was captured in Uniontown a few hours later and brought to Oakland.

Oren Friend, of near Friendsville, entered a plea of guilty on the indictment charging him with burglary. He has not yet been sentenced.

Cecil Payne was tried before the Court on a charge of burglary. He was found not guilty.

Samuel Bowman, of Deep Creek, indicted on a bastardy charge, was tried before the Court. Verdict guilty, and the traverser gave bond for the support of the child.

Angus McKenzie and Charles Merrbach, of Salisbury, Pa., who were caught in the act of digging and carrying away potatoes from a field on the Stone House farm near Grantsville one night this fall, confessed their guilt when arraigned before the Court. They were paroled for three years and sentence suspended.

Okey Junkins, of Deer Park, who was arrested near Morgantown, W. Va., following the issuance of a warrant charging him with non-support of his wife and children, pled guilty to the indictment found against him. Sentence was suspended, the traverser promising to discharge his duties as a husband and father in the future.

Robert Moon, who was recently detected while in the act of burglarizing the store of A. D. Naylor in Oakland, entered a plea of guilty.

George D. Strawser, of near Deer Park, possession of liquor which was found when he was in the act of making a transfer of the goods from his own automobile to another car in a garage at Loch Lynn Heights during the past summer, asked for a jury trial. The verdict was guilty.

Theodore Stephens, of Oakland, alleged tool of a bootlegging ring operating in Oakland, was called for trial Monday and not answering his bondsmen instituted a search for their ward. He was located about 11:00 o'clock in a house just outside of town and turned over to the Sheriff. When called for trial Tuesday morning he entered a plea of guilty on a charge of selling liquor.

William Tasker, sale of liquor; plea of guilty confessed.

G. J. Lee, possession of liquor, and Perry Dennis, the latter having been before the Court at previous terms, both confessed guilty to the charge of possessing liquor for the purpose of sale.

Oscar Savage and Elmer Burkhardt, of Accident, entered pleas of guilty to the indictment charging them with giving liquor to minors.

Others who entered pleas of guilty when arraigned on liquor charges were George Spiker, Joseph Minnicks and Stanley D. Foster.

Last night at nine o'clock the jury in the case of the State vs. Ray Miller, who was indicted charged with carnal knowledge of a female under age, rendered a verdict of guilty after deliberating about an hour.

There yet remains quite a number of cases to be disposed of with the probability that court will remain in session the balance of this week and for several days of next week.

CLERK OF COURT TOWER BEGINS ANOTHER TERM

Subscribes to Oath of Office Administered by Associate Judge Albert A. Doub Yesterday.

Mr. Edward Z. Tower, who has been connected with the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, first as a deputy and later, following the death of his father, the late William H. Tower, as Clerk of the Court, for more than fifty years, was sworn into office as his own successor in open court yesterday morning, the oath being administered by Associate Judge Albert A. Doub in the presence of the officers of the court and those present whose business necessitated their presence in the court room.

Upon administering the oath to Mr. Tower, Judge Doub took occasion to pay high trihute to his ability and faithfulness in discharging the multitude of duties devolving upon him as an official. Judge Wagaman, who was also on the bench with Judge Doub, likewise commended Mr. Tower for his faithfulness in the discharge of his duties.

Remarks of commendation were also delivered by Attorneys Gilmor S. Hamill, Fred. A. Thayer, Julius C. Renninger, Wm. R. Offutt, Asa T. Matthews, Ernest R. Jones and Stuart F. Hamill, to all of which Mr. Tower responded in an appreciative manner in which he evinced deep feeling.

Following the addresses Mr. Tower was the recipient of many warm hand shakes and words of congraulation.

AFTER PLAYING FAVORITE TUNES, COMMITS SUICIDE

Reuben Blair, 55, Plays Guitar and Sings, Then Walks Home and Shoots Himself In Head

"I'm playing my last tune for you," remarked Reuben Blair, 55 years old, of Bayard, West Va., a small mining town located on the Potomac River, twelve miles south of Oakland, as he strummed his guitar and sang old-time ballads for the entertainment of a party of friends Sunday afternoon when they had gathered about him at the home of a neighbor. Following his remark he left the company a few minutes later, going to his home where he ended his life with a bullet through his head.

His daughter, Mrs. Jerry Harvey, with whom he had resided for several years, could assign no reason for his tragic act other than the fact that he appeared despondent at times because he had been out of employment during the past two weeks. He had no domestic or financial worries, she declared.

Blair had spent the early afternoon in company with a number of friends and about two o'clock, while playing his guitar and singing with the other members of the party, remarked that it was the last time he would play for them. His friends, thinking that Blair was joking, paid no attention to his talk, as he appeared to be in excellent spirits.

Leaving the party he went to his daughter's home, spoke to several members of the family and walked to the upper floor of the house and into the room he occupied as a sleeping apartment. His grand daughter passed through the hallway several minutes later and saw him sitting on his bed but noticed nothing unusual in his manner or posture. A few seconds later a shot was heard, followed immediately by the sound of a heavy body falling to the floor.

Members of the family hurried to the room and found the man lying on the floor ina pool of blood with a bullet hole in his head and a smoking .32 calibre revolver at his side. Dr. I. B. Johnson, the village physician, was immediately summoned, but efforts to save the wounded man were futile and he succumbed at 3:40 o'clock, about an hour after the shooting occurred.

Mr. Blair was a man of kindly and genial disposition and was well and favorably known in the community in which he lived.

He is survived by two daughters: Mrs. Jerry Harvey, of Bayard, and Mrs. Bertha Adams, of Jacksonville, Florida; a brother, Armstrong Blair, of Rainelle, W. Va. A son, Rufus, died several years ago while serving in the United States Army.

The funeral of the deceased was conducted Tuesday afternoon, with interment of the remains at Bayard.

GAS COMPANIES MERGE

Local and Public Service Company Organize as One Concern

Announcement was made last Friday at the Cumberland & Allegheny Gas Company's office of the consolidation of the Southern Gas & Power Corporation with the Central Public Service Company, thus practically doubling the size of the public utility organization, which includes the local gas service system.

The only effect locally, of this, it was pointed out by the manager, J. Alex. Mayers, will be a large increase in the resources at the command of the Cumberland & Allegheny Gas Company, and a strengthening of its facilities for handling engineering and financial problems incident to the constant expansion required to provide the best possible service.

The transaction which brought together the Southern Gas & Power and Central Public Service interests took place last week in the headquarters of the former at Philadelphia. Colonel A. E. Peirce, of Chicago, who has had a long and successful career in the public utility field, is president of the new organization and his associates are all experienced utility men.

Gas, electric and water companies operating in seventeen different States and the Canadian province of New Brunswick, are now grouped under one management. The Southern Gas & Power operating companies, all supplying gas except one water company in Lexington, Ky., are situated in North Carolina, South Carolina, Alabama, Georgia, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, New Hampshire and New York. Central Public Service companies also operate in New York as well as in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, and Maine, and are engaged principally in furnishing electric light and power, gas and water service.

The present capacity of the electric stations equals 35,430 horsepower of which 21,014 horsepower is hydro-electric. Connected to these stations are 1,242 miles of transmission and distribution lines. The gas manufacturing plants have a rated capacity of 11,420,000 cubic feet of gas n day and their gas distribution systems total 838 miles of mains. Besides the above gas plants, there are extensive natural gas properties in Maryland, West Virginia and Texas with total consumption of approximutely 13,000,000 cubic feet per day and nearly 800 miles of mains. Companies in the unified organization serve a total population of about 750,000.

STILL OF LARGE CAPACITY FOUND AND DESTROYED

Was Located on Mountain East of Deer Park—Guy W. Gilson Being the Reputed Owner.

Working under a warrant issued by a West Virginia Federal Court, State Policemen Larue, Coombs and Skidmore, of West Virginia, and Constable Andrew Shartzer, of Oakland, found and destroyed what was probably the largest and best equipped still in Garrett county, on Monday of this week when they visited the mountain home of Guy W. Gilson, located east of Deer Park.

Gilson was not at home when the officers arrived; neither was Mrs. Gilson, but their daughter was present, and upon beholding the officers she at once became concerned with the whereabouts of the family cow, and going to the door she lustily called "sookey, sookey," presumably an agreed-upon alarm to the still workers should any suspicious men arrive at the family domicile.

Following tracks made in the mud leading from the house toward the mountain side the officers were soon led to the still and upon approaching a woman, said to be Mrs. Gilson met them and said she did not know anything about where her husband could be found or any knowledge of a still being in the vicinity. A few steps further on, however, the men found a dug-out and within its walls a five-hundred gallon mash container was found, a still in operation and about eight gallons of the finished product. The worm used in distilling the product is said to have been two inches in diameter, while the appliances were of such dimensions that it was impossible to move them. In the dug-out a stream of water was running, having been brought in through a series of pipes and a nicely arranged heating plant was also in evidence.

After dismantling the still and taking the worm in charge the officers set the dug-out on fire as well as they could after saturating everything inflammable with kerosene oil.

Another raid was made near Oakland yesterday afternoon by Federal Officers from Cumberland who placed Dock Collins and Robert Hoys under arrest after having visited their homes where it is alleged they found liquor in quantities. Both gave bond for their appearance at Federal Court in Cumberland.

It is said that the officers also found a well equipped still on the river hill west of town, but the ownership is not known.

TOXIN-ANTITOXIN TREATMENT TO BE ADMINISTERED

To the Chldiren of Local Grammar and Parochial Schools.

What is diphtheria? Diphtheria is a severe catching or infectuous disease of childhood which attacks the mucus membranes of the nose, throat and windpipe. The germs are present in the throat and nasal discharge of persons having diphtheria and are transmitted directly to others by coughing, sneezing or even talking.

A sore throat may mean diphtheria. Consult your physician at once. If it is diphtheria, use the antitoxin treatment at once. Antitoxin has reduced the number of deaths from diphtheria, but there has been no noticeable reduction in the numher of cases.

Help stamp out diphtheria by seeing your child immune from diphtheria. Give him the toxin-antitoxin treatment. Children who are too young to go to school need protection against diphtheria just as much as school children. It is the most fatal disease among children from three to five years of age, and ranks third among the fatal diseases of children from one to three. These little ones can be protected as easily as the older ones.

The Toxin-Antitoxin treatment is given in three treatments a week apart. This treatment is to be started January 5th, at the Oakland Grammar school at 10 a. m. and the Parochial school at 1 p. m. This is free and is to be given by the local physicians with the help of the County Health Nurse, Miss Rhesa M. King. All parents are urged to sign slips being sent to them, stating they wish their child to receive this treatment, and return to the school and to bring their children of pre-school age to either school at the time stated.

Other schools in Garrett county that have received this treatment are Grantsville, Deer Park, Crellin, Hutton, Amish Orphanage near Grantsville, and Kempton. Deer Park and the Amish were 100 per cent, let's make Oakland 100 per cent.

SENATOR WELLER IS TO REMAIN IN STATE POLITICS

Seeks to Control National Convention Delegates and to Run for Senate in 1928, Report

(Baltimore Sun)

During the recent campaign it was freely predicted by his opponents, both in the Republican primary and the general election, that if he were defeated he would not be heard from politically again. It now is rumored that after March 4, when his Senatorial term will expire, he will devote himself to strenghtening his hold on the Republican organization, and will make his Baltimore headquarters in the office of his friend, Jacob France, of the law firm of France, McLanahan & Rouzer.

Two prizes the Senator hopes to win by this course, it is declared. One, and the one considered the easier, is to control the delegates to the next Republican National Convention. Unless his defeat has lessened the attachment of the members of the Republican State Central Committee for him, Mr. Weller still controls the committee. At any rate, he did the day before the election, and whoever controls that committee stands a good chance of selecting the delegates to the convention. It is suggested that control of the eight delegates from Maryland might be worth to the controller an appointment of some importance.

The other string to Mr. Weller's bow, it is said, and both may be pulled at once, is to run again for Senator.

Mr. Weller, his friends assert, is not unmindful that the Republicans stand a much better chance of carrying Maryland in a Presidential contest than in a State election and that he got his present position as running mate with Warren G. Harding, who carried this State for President by more than 55,000, although Mr. Weller's majority was 40,000 less.

The next Senatorial election in Maryland will be in 1928, when a successor to Senator William Cabell Bruce will be chosen, and it will occur with the Presidential election. It is taken for granted among politicians that Senator Brue will be a candidate to succeed himself.

DECEMBER TERM REPORT OF COUNTY GRAND JURY

Made To The Judges of the Circuit Court Upon Adjournment Last Thursday Morning

Upon asking to be discahrged from further service at the present session of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, the grand jury filed the following report with presiding Judge Albert A. Doub on last Thursday morning after having visited the public building and incorporated in its report the recommendations sugeted by the Court respecting improvements and such other material things concerning the Court House and Jail.

The report in full follows:

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland—

The Grand Jury for the December Term, 1926, of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, respectfully reports to the Court that we have been in session for the past four days and that during this time we have, to the best of our ability, inquired into all violations of the criminal laws and have endeavored to faithfully perform all of the other duties required of us as Grand Jurors.

We have had before us and have examined 120 witnesses and have found presentments and indictments in all cases which we believed the evidence warranted and justified.

As instructed by the Court, we have looked over and examined the records in the several county offices and was pleased to find that they are kept in a neat and systematic manner, and we commend those in charge for the manner in which they conduct the affairs of their respective offices and for the uniform courteous treatment extended to all who visit them or have business with them.

We are pleased to note the neat and clean condition of the interior of the Court House and we commend the janitor for the interest and pride he takes in his work.

We have also examined the Sheriff's residence and the jail and are pleased to report that the same are neat and sanitary and that the prisoners in the jail are well and comfortably provided for.

We desire to heartily commend Sheriff Yutzy for the able manner of conducting his office and especially for the conduct of the jail and for his personal and humanitarian interest that he shows towards the inmates and prisoners confined in the jail.

We also extend to Mrs. Floyd Stahl, sister of the Sheriff, who acts as matron of the jail, our appreciation for her kindness and interest toward the female inmates and young boys.

During the examination of the county buildings—the Court House, Sheriff's residence and Jail—we note a number of repairs that should be made, as we believe that these buildings should be kept in first-class condition in every respect. We deem it wise economy to keen the buildings in good condition at all times. The exterior of the Court House is very dirty and we suggest that it be washed and cleaned in the spring.

We have had before us Mr. George D. Browning, President of the Board of County Commissioners, and have discussed with him personally the repairs and improvements needed to the Court House, Sheriff's residence and Jail, and have his assurance that he will endeavor to have all of these improvements and repairs made before the convening of the next Grand Jury.

We have inspected the vault, which contains the land records and other valuable records of the county, and after giving this matter our careful consideration we have arrived at the conclusion that with a re-arrangement, additional files and other equipment, that it will accommodate the records for the present, at least.

It has been called to our attention that the Rev. C. A. Shilke, of the Lutheran church, has been holding weekly services in the Jail for some time past, and we desire to extend to him our thanks for this manifestation of the spiritual interest in the prisoners.

We take great pleasure in commending Mr. William R. Offutt, who has been State's Attorney for Garrett county for the past seven years, and who is now about to retire from this important office. Mr. Offutt has rendered able and efficient service to the county during his term of office. He has discharged all of the various duties pertaining to his office of State's Attorney without fear, favor or partiality; he has worked hard and has given all matters prompt attention of which he has been advised.

We also wish to thank Mr. Offutt for the able, courteous and thorough manner in which he has aided this grand jury in the disposal of the many important matters brought before us.

We desire to extend to His Honor Judge Doub our appreciation and thanks for his considerate and courteous treatment.

We now beg to be discharged.

Respectfully submitted.

W. W. DAWSON, Foreman.
B. I. GONDER,
W. O. DAVIS, Clerks.
Oakland, December 9, 1926.

Card of Thanks.

We desire in this manner to thank our kind friends who so kindly assisted us during the illness and after the death of our husband and father.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1926.
SAMUEL THE JUST JUDGE,
I Samuel 7 and 12. Read intervening chapters.
Direct your hearts unto Jehovah, and serve Him only.—I Samuel 7:3.

THE WORK OF SAMUEL.

Israel had drifted into idolatry. That Ark of the Covenant had become confused with the Maker of the covenant as is true so often in human life. A Baltimore Catholic bemoaned: "I have lost my God," when her crucifix was missing. Idols are universally carried from representation to presentation of Deity and that which was meant to aid thought in concentration upon God becomes a clog upon the mental journey and the symbol becomes the center of devotional attitudes. When the armies struggled for mastry and Israel was beaten they sent for the Ark that its presence might protect them from the onrush of the Philistines. But the symbol failed to perform. Horseshoes and hunches usually do unless accompanied by a good bit of energy and judgment. They were utterly defeated and the symbol was lost. It was a good thing for Israel that it happened else they would have been so firmly fixed in their devotion to a golden box that the progress of spirit would have been out of the question. And for twenty heart-breaking years they groped for something to which to tie their drooping faith. Samuel used the period to clear their understanding of the lumbering symbolism that there might be space in which God could dwell. Many regarded him simply as a fortune teller to whom they might apply for direction in finding lost stock, locating water for new wells and other ministries of that sort. Yet across the years his influence grew as he walked the highways and formed the religious guilds that held much still of superstition but were alive with religious feeling. Presently he called a gathering at Mispah and the people responded from all quarters. It was a gathering for reforming the religious thinking of these leaders of Israel and symbols were ruthlessly shattered. He sat as judge and many a case was cleared in the high atmosphere of religious consecration. How long it lasted one can not know but it was long enough for the news of it to reach the cities along the sea and for the Philistine Lords to decide that it was a dangerous proceeding to call together their troops and ascend the hills to disperse the crowd. It was an old time camp-meeting like those of our wilderness period and its first interest was religion and the quickening of devotion for God. Possibly a small group made up the representatives from the more distant tribes. Israel and Philistia may have gotten the news in the same fashion and by the same lips.

THE TEST OF HIS WORK.

Faced by the determined effort to break up the camp-meeting the same situation faced this crowd that had been faced twenty years earlier. There was the same anxious fear that had sent them scurrying for the protection of the Ark in that earlier day. Now there was no suggestion of its need. The symbol had been discounted and was being replaced by soul. Here is the real test of the prophet in any age. Can he lead the people into the shrine of the spirit or will they worship the stones from which it is made? Money or manhood, force or friendliness, profit or service, denomination or kingdom are merely some of the shapes taken by the old thought-forms in newer days. Yet the test of the prophet remains the same thru all the centuries and only as the symbol, whether it be a word like the Klan, or a figure like the dollar mark, or a book like the Bible, loses itself in the spirit that created it can the Spirit of Life guide the race up the hills to a new world dominated by the living God. And in the hour of testing in that old day of Israel the fact that they no longer called for symbols but asked for prayer to the God of their Fathers shows the real progress that had been making during those hidden years. Samuel's teachings were bearing real fruit and those weeks of constant intercourse upon this hill summit were having the highest sort of influence in the lives of those who listened. And the stone set up the mark of a spiritual victory far more vital than the physical repulse of the Philistines which after all does not seem to have shaken their overlordship of the land if one may judge from later development. But that stone is a waymark of progress and there should be many a one in every man's life.

THE LARGER ACTIVITIES.

Samuel was one of the great patriots of all time. His chief interest was that land of his love and that people of his passion. It is to be remembered that there was no central authority in Israel any more than there was in our own colonial days. Congress had only an advisory power. And in the period of the confederated states there was little more, so that a more stable government must be set up if the spirit of independence tested upon the fields of the revolution was to endure. So the constitution was written and Washington was inaugurated. Israel passed thru the same situation and followed the same course. The Judges were local leaders with the probability that more than one may have lived at the same time. There was no means of uniform action on the part of the tribes and as they were under the power of Philistia so that no smith was allowed in Israel in the early days of Saul one realizes how imperative a central government was becoming and why Samuel was so interested in the choice. He was shrewd enough to pick one from the weak tribe of Benjamin so that the antagonisms of strong Judah and Ephraim might not interfere and Saul had his hearty support. The choice was vindicated by the victory over Ammon.

Then came the final meeting at the sacred place in Gilgal, the place of covenant under Joshua, at which the cornation was concluded and the rulership definitely given to Saul. Here was the pledging of the people to loyalty to Jehovah as well as to the king and the dramatic resignation of Samuel from his position of authority, In their presence he demanded the full clearing of his administration. Had he defrauded any one? Had he ever accepted a bribe? Had he oppressed any one? And they voiced their approval of all that he had done during this judgeship. Then follows his farewell address and his pledge of support for the new administration by continuous prayer for the nation's good. He was never greater than in the day he surrendered his office to another with his benediction upon the new occupant.

Well, friends, if business keeps up, we'll have the old car paid for and can start paying for a new one.

Al Smith's feat of carrying New York State is one thing; carrying the rest of the country is forty-seven additional and wholly necessary things.

Americans lose $900,000 yearly by not presenting government bonds for redemption. And then they call us dollar chasers.

THE MEANING OF LIBERTY

One word in the English language often misused is the word liberty.

Liberty is not the right of every man to do as he pleases. Every man cannot do as he pleases, since such an exercise of liberty would limit the similar rights of others.

Liberty is only the right to do as one pleases insofar as this does not sacrifice the freedom of others and the welfare of society.

The savage in the jungle alone has that liberty which some conceive to be the right of every individual; that is to say, no law restrains him from working his own will.

But in such a case the ambition of others to have that same liberty restrains its exercise. The strong prevail; the rights of the weak are sacrificed.

In an ordered state the individual must sacrifice his "right" to maintain a public nuisance, disregard sanitation, defy quarantine, refuse schooling and satisfy his anti-social appetites in order that the people as a whole may have freedom from annoyance, disease, pauperism, ignorance or violence due to the exercise of what in a more primitive state of society would be considered natural rights.

Our crop of anarchists—rebels opposed to regulation in the interests of society—seems to be growing. Without counting the advantages of the protection which society gives them, they wish not to be heard by the statutes and ordinances necessary to the protection of others. Such an attitude seems to be chiefly the result of excessive self-esteem.

Especially is respect due social regulation when the safeguards against which complaint is made have been effected by legal process in a republic where law is public opinion crystalized.

We have no law in this country which cannot be repealed whenever a majority of the people so decide. We have provided in our federal Constitution for the preservation of certain personal rights essential to freedom which even statutes cannot invade. We have a larger measure of true liberty in this country—the liberty of every man to work out his own destiny—than is found in any other country in the world.

If every citizen should turn rebel against every law which does not suit him the result would be anarchy and the rights of all would be sacrificed. To expect society to extend to us the protection of the laws we like and in turn to denounce and defy those laws which impose disagreeable restrainsts upon us, is evidence of the lack of an underlying sense of fairness. People can live together only by mutual concessions and a decent regard for the rules of the game. Those who refuse to do so are not "square." They attach too much importance to themselves and too little to others.

We hear much praise for the spirit of revolt. When people revolt against society they revolt against themselves. Those who sneer at the past and the institutions it has bequeathed to the present generation, too lightly estimate the value of their social and political and economic inheritance and the cost at which it has been gained. A little more time devoted to the study of the good in what exists and a little less to inventing something theoretically better out of thin air, would be beneficial to millions of Americans.

Music Recital at the Parochial School in Oakland.

On Tuesday evening the music class conducted by the Sisters of Mercy gave a recital at St. Peter's school in Oakland. The course followed by the class in its regular study is that of the Peabody Conservatory and the selections given in this recital were chosen from those required in the Peabody course. From Maurice Treacy, who began his study of music in September, at the age of seven, to Miss Nell Offutt, who ranks as "second year high" in the music class, according to Peabody rating, every member of the class did his or her part to make the recital enjoyable.

Miss Nell Offutt's technique in the selection by Moskowski attracted attention. Betty Broadwater played Scytte's "Fisher Boy" with remarkable skill, although it is a selection required in a grade considerably beyond her.

Marking perfect time, Bond Weber, age seven, directed the juvenile orchestra composed of the members of the elementary music class, which organization includes the three Treacy brothers, the two Weber brothers, the two Riley sisters, Bettie Broadwater, Mary Helbig, Genevieve Sweeney and Cecelia Kerins, who will repeat its entertaining part in the program at the Maryland Theatre, Thursday evening, December 16th.

Sara Stanton, who has completed four years' music work in one, played Waehs' "Fairy Fingers" with the airy touch demanded by the selection.

The program was as follows:

Triumphal march from Aida
Mary Helbig Genevieve Sweeney
Cecelia Kerins, Virginia Kelly.

Part II.

George Charles Keller

We are confronted with the loss of our President, George Charles Keller, who gave so largely of his time and experience to this institution since its establishment in 1910; one who devoted his untiring interest and wise counsel until his brief illness, followed by his death, October 29th, 1926. It is with profound regret we submit to the will of God and acknowledge the severance of our trusted friend and efficiem President from all earthly relations. Death has removed from his family a devoted husband and father, and from his friends a man of sterling worth and genial personality. His business associates suffered the loss of one of great dependability, splendid intergrity and a faithful and efficient President and counselor. It is surely fitting that we pause in our work and consider, for it is from the loss of such men that our inspirations must come. His kind, steadfast christian character stands in our hearts as a monument to his memory.

WHEREAS, George Charles Keller gave so unsparingly of his time and talents and of his intimate knowledge of the needs of this community, it is our desire that we record this expression of our esteem upon the minutes of this institution; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That we, the Board of Directors of The First State Bank of Grantsville, Md., lament the loss of our friend and business associate and that this expression of our appreciation of his value to this institution be spread upon the minutes of this meeting and that a copy thereof be sent to his family and this record be published in the local papers as a tribute to his memory and assurance of our sympathy for his family in their great loss.

WHEREAS, Almighty God, in His wise providence, has called from our midst our friends, and co-workers, Mrs. J. J. Bender and Mrs. Joel H. Miller; therefore be it

RESOLVED. I. That the Lutheran Missionary Society has lost two faithful friends and attendants; when health permitted always willing to assist, setting a beautiful example of fidelity and faithfulness;

II. That while we greatly feel our great loss as willing and cheerful workers, we mingle our sorrow and sympathy with that of their husbands and families and commend to the loving care and sustaining fellowship a Heavenly Father, whom we serve.

III. That we shall cherish in loving memory their kindly spirit and their co-operation in behalf of the well-being of our Society.

IV. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the bereaved families.

For several years past some unscrupulous persons from out of the county have been coming into this neighborhood each Christmas season with trucks and without seeing the land owners, go into the woods and cut and carry away load after load of Christmas trees. Last Sunday, two trucks, bearing license plates 166-369 and 273-957, came into this community and the men with them cut, without the consent of the owner, two loads of spruce trees which they hauled away and no doubt sold or are selling them at a fat profit. Land owners here are getting very much annoyed by this practice and some prosecution measures will likely follow the visitation of the men in question, for they can and will be located and brought to justice.

SENTENCES PRONOUNCED IN THE CRIMINAL COURT

Four Are Sent to the Penitentiary While Many Others are Fined or Will Serve Time

Last Thursday morning was a busy half day for the judges in the local criminal court as well as for the court officials generally, as well as being one that brought misery and caused a number who had been convicted for violations of the laws to become retrospective as they were called before the bar of justice to receive sentence for their evil deeds.

In pronouncing sentence Judges Doub and Wagaman tempered mercy with justice, as they have always done, and immediately upon completing their duty they returned to their respective homes, leaving Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan upon the bench, who had arrived in Oakland on Wednesday morning and who continued to preside until Saturday evening when court recessed until yesterday afternoon at which time Judge Sloan returned to Oakland at which time he passed sentence upon several, among whom were Lloyd McCormick and Berkeley Mosser, the latter convicted on Saturday morning on the indictment charging him with manslaughter in causing the death of Miss Fulk when the car being driven by Mosser collided with a car in which the victim was an occupant and who died of her injuries some time afterward.

Sentences were pronounced by the Court in the following cases:

Berkeley Mosser, one year in the Maryland House of Correction. School Teeth

A taxpayer brought suit recently, in a supposedly enlightened community, too—to stop the school board from paying for dental inspection and care of pupils' teeth in the public schools. The high light of the suit was the testimony of the principal, to this effect:

She found an improvement of 99.8 percent in the mental ability of school children who were taught to take proper care of their teeth. The percentage was arrived at by painstaking observation and checking up their work before and after the dental instruction.

Call it one hundred percent improvement, or call it half that much, if you like. If it will effect only 25 percent improvement, or only 10 per cent. in the mental keenness and studious accomplishments of the pupils, such work is well worth paying for. Still more valuable, possibly, is the better morale that is likely to go with a clean, well kept outfit of teeth.

A Real Santa Claus at The Garrett National Bank.

Today and tomorrow Santa Claus will do duty at the Garrett National Bank and keep faith with the hundreds of children attracted by the announcement appearing in The Republican last week that he would be there in person to hand out Christmas tokens in the real old-time way—a stocking full of candy surmounted with an orange. Santa was on time, as he always has been, and when he appeared in the lobby of the bank this morning there were several there to greet him and to receive his cheery "Merry Christmas." There is also a very beautifully decorated Christmas tree in the bank which is decorated with colored lights and attractive ornaments.

Oakland High School News.

Senior-Junior Party.

On Friday, December 17, the seniors and juniors of the Oakland High school held a Christmas party in the auditorium of the High school.

The hall was decorated with pine boughs and laurel, and an immense tree stood at the front of the hall, which with its beautiful decorations lent a degree of Christmas spirit to all.

The evening was spent happily by every one. Playing cards and dancing were the chief pastimes. At a late hour Santa Claus arrived and distributed gifts among members of the two classes. This was greatly enjoyed by all, as we felt sure that we had done a good year's work or "Santa" would not have visited us.

The party was chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Pollock, Mrs. Bernard Gonder, Mrs. B. C. Lewis, Mrs. Margaret McComas. Other guests were, besides members of the faculty, Mrs. E. Z. Tower, Messrs. Russell Brown, Carter Forman, Frederick Humes, Herbert Bowers, Stanley Bond, Carl McIntire, Wiley Welling, Julius Renninger, Franklin Wolf and Robert Hoffman.

Literary Secretary

DIED.

HENRY HAMILL JUNKINS.

Henry Hamill Junkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Junkins, died at Akron, Ohio on October 18, at the age of 66 years and nine days. He was born and reared at Kitzmiller; was married to Minnie Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Van Brown, of Gorman, Md., to whom were born two daughters, Mrs. Rey Kettle and Mrs. Pauline Kane. He is also survived by five sisters and three brothers. He was laid to rest in the Pleasant View cemetery at Akron, following services conducted at his late home by Rev. Davis, assisted by a minister of the Nazarine church, of which his wife is a devout member. Some years ago Mr. Junkins resided at Mountain Lake Park where he united with the Methodist Episcopal church.

Oakland merchants and others engaged in trade, were never busier in their various callings than during the past week. When one of them was asked the other day, "to what do you attribute the activity and the apparent increase in sales and business generally in your store?" he answered without hesitating "that half-page advertisement which has been in The Republican during the past two weeks and our ability to supply our customers with what they want at attraetive prices, coupled with the fact that we are all-year-'round advertisers in The Republican and aim to satisfy the purchasing public in every line; by living up to our printed word and giving every one that comes in here a square deal and a dollar's worth of dependable merchandise for one hundred cents." That's the gist attending the success of every marchant or man engaged in other business enterprises—publicity and dependability.

Miss Mary Virginia Willison, who is engaged in teaching in Baltimore, will arrive here Friday to spend the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Willison, at their home in Mountain Lake Park.

STILL, AFTER FOUR YEARS OPERATING, DESTROYED

Walter Smith, Glenn Dixon and David Shank Caught By Federal Agents at the Plant.

A moonshine still of considerable proportions has been known to exist for several years—four, to be exact—according to information given out since it was discovered and destroyed last Friday night, in a growth of pines along one of the upper reaches of Deep Creek, a mile or two from McHenry, the still having been spotted and the operators identified two or three weeks ago by the State officers of Garrett county who passed the word on to the Federal operatives in Cumberland, with the result that a raid was planned for last Wednesday night, but court being in session and other matters interferring, the raid was postponed until Friday night at which time Chief Dunmire, assisted by Agent Jarvis, from Cumberland, lit down on the bunch and caught them while in the act of manufacturing several hundred gallons of contraband.

The parties arrested in the raid, all of whom were engaged in brewing the liquor were Walter Smith, Glenn Dixon and David Shank, the latter an old offender who has been in court several times on similar charges, while his associates, so far as can be learned, are still novices at the business.

The officers placed the men under arrest, confiscated their still and the several barrels of mash found in the building and destroyed it. The offenders will be examined by the U. S. Commissioner in Cumberland and in all probability be held for the action of the Federal grand jury.

DAIRY PRODUCTS SPECIAL

When In Oakland Created More Interest Than at any Other Point Except Hagerstown

A recapitulation of attendance of farmers, registration of farmers, attendance at women's meetings, high school meetings addressed by Professor Happy and number of grade public school children visiting the National Dairy Council's Exhibit train of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company's Dairy Products Special, which was operated over its lines in the month of November, shows conclusively that more interest was manifested by the citizenry of this county than by the residents of any other of Pennsylvania, West Virginia or Maryland, with the exception of Hagerstown, where the train made scheduled stops. Thirteen towns in Pennsylvania were visited; twelve in West Virginia, and nine in Maryland.

The information furnished The Republican showing the places at which the train stopped, with the number of persons showing their interest in the train and what the speakers connected with it had to say, shows the following at Oakland and Hagerstown, the Oakland figures being first:

Farmers meeting	220
Farmers registering	209
Women's meeting	150
High school meeting	400
Grade school at train	1400
Total	2379
Hagerstown meeting—
Farmers meeting	85
Farmers registering	71
Women's meeting	4
High school meeting	1200
Grade school at train	1200
Total	2560

At the thirty-six points visited 52 purebred bulls were sold and 35 gift heifers awarded. Oakland business men bought one of the latter which was given to Mrs. Speicher at Accident, while individual farmers purchased four purebred bulls—one Jersey and three Guernseys.

"HEALTH SERVICE"

The Title of a Book Prepared for Marylanders.

Ways in which the State Department of Health is carrying on a continuous and carefully organized campaign for the prevention of disease and the promotion of health among the people of the State, are briefly summed up in a circular entitled "Health Service" prepared by the Department in response to requests for such information from schools and clubs.

The Director, as the circular shows, is the executive officer. His offices and the headquarters of the bureaus and divisions entrusted with the highly diversified but closely interrelated activities of the department are at 16 West Saratoga street, Baltimore City. The Director is represented in the State-wide work by the deputy and assistant State deputy health officers and the full-time county health officers.

For purposes of health administration, the State is divided into sanitary districts, each consisting of two or more counties, and each district in charge of a full time deputy State health officer. Increased duties have made it necessary to reduce the section covered and to establish full time health departments in certain counties so that there are now ten deputies, three assistant deputies and four full time county health officers in the field. Public health nursing activities are an integral part of the health work in each section and there are now forty-five nurses engaged in public health work in the counties.

At the central headquarters there are eight fully organized bureaus and two divisions, the duties of which are indicated by the titles. Bureaus: Vital Statistics, Communieable Diseases, Bacteriology, Chemistry, Snnitary Engineering, Child Hygiene, Food and Drugs, Personnel nnd Accounts Divisions: Legal Administration and Public Health Education.

Reports are received daily by the Bureau of Communicable Diseases from health officers of communicable diseases that occur in their districts. Outbreaks of diseases are immediately investigated and measures are taken for their control. The Bureau of Bacteriology makes analyses and tests and otherwise assists physicians in the diagnosis nnd prevention of the disease. The central laboratory is located in Baltimore City, with branch laboratories at Hurlock, Cumberland, Hagorstown, Frederick and Washington, D. C.

MOTORIZED FIRE ENGINE WAS RECEIVED YESTERDAY

Oakland Now Has Equipment Equalled Only By Towns of Greater Pretentions.

A completely equipped, first class fire engine made its appearance yesterday in Oakland and will hereafter be known as Oakland F. D. No. 1.

The engine, a high powered Locomobile, cost approximately $3700 and is capable of making 70 miles an hour when called upon to do so. The hose which is somewhat over 1000 feet in length together with the engine, will reduce the fire menace in Oakland and vicinity at least 50 percent, it was asserted by several business men.

The pump is capable of "putting out" 400 gallons of water per minute under high pressure, and will take its supply either from a river or stream or from the fire plugs. "The total destruction of the home of Mr. Louis Bush last winter was due to lack of pressure," commented Walter W. Dawson, cashier of the First National Bank, "but a recurrence of a similar catastrophe will be practically impossible with the new equipment."

Because the new equipment will reduce the fire menace, the Oakland Fire Department is now working with the insurance underwriters in an attempt to lower the insurance rate. The department is now composed of 25 men, with George Kerins, fire chief, Emroy Bolden, assistant fire chief, "Bill" Browning and John Sweeney, fire captains, Milton Sincell, secretary, and Walter Dawson, treasurer.

The town and the fire department had to cooperate in order that a new equipment might be obtained. The fire department promised a first payment of between seven and eight hundred dollars, and the town in turn promised to meet the ensuing payments on the machine. This $800 will be raised by subscriptions and solicitation throughout this and neighboring towns. It is said that Loch Lynn Heights has already pledged $200, and it is hoped that the balance of the first payment will be obtained by voluntary contributions. The new machine is at present being housed in the Kerins Brothers Garage, but will shortly be removed to the fire house at the City Hall. The fire engine that was formerly used will be kept in readiness for any emergency and will be known as Oakland F. D. No. 2.

APPRECIATION OF ROYALTY

In view of the growing frequency of royal visits to America, readers may be interested in the spirit shown when the Prince of Wales recently visited the Gold Coast of West Africa. The following journalistic gem is from Vox Populi, a native newspaper of that region.

"Words adequately describable of the significance, historical, political and otherwise, of this exceptionally unique and unprecedented visit to West Africa of His Majesty the King's eldest son are to us unavailable—unavailable, indeed, because every effort of ours to obtain fitting terms and suitable phrases is absolutely drowned by the excessive gladdening of our hearts and merrying of our very souls at the joyous fact that in our own lifetime, by design of Providence Divine, we have been blissfully privileged and honored to see in person, yea, face to face, him whom many ancient Kings, rich and noble men, would have rejoiced to have seen.

"Herein, then, is the warranty for that almost inextinguishable outburst of merriment, delight and ecstasy of our people. Like petrol poured into the conflagrant flames, our joys have been still more ablazed by the several arrangements and decorations undertaken here and there to celebrate this festive occasion and to make the festive reception of our royal visitor a supreme exquisite one."

Some tribute, eh, what? And that, seems to give adequate expressions to the emotions of some excitable Americans when a crown prince or a queen deigns to visit our country.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1926.

Review: MOSES TO SAMUEL.

Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him, that glory may dwell in our land.—Psalm 85:9.

THE CHRISTMAS LESSON.

Following Christmas Day there is scarcely a possibility of getting away from the birthday of our Lord, and many will give the whole time to its consideration. It is the familiar story from Luke of the shepherds and the song. It was the coming of a Saviour, Christ, the Lord; one who meets our need at its deepest point by saving to the uttermost so that all minor things are included. It is one who is anointed or commissioned for the carrying out of God's purpose for His world of which He could say, "I have finished the work Thou gavest Me to do." It marks the arrival of the Master over every passion and power both within and without the soul. And He entered the low point of life conditions so that he was cradled in a borrowed manger, within a stable provided by some bit of human kindliness for a woman's need. The earliest word of His arrival was sung to toilers in the fields, probably slaves, herders of sheep that were not their own. The message was to the lowest of men as men classify them, so that all may share in His life, for the line that can reach the depths can touch every level of the sea. One singular thing is that after they had caught sight of the thrilling wonder of a loving God stooping over man's deepest need and had gone from their visit to Bethlehem with souls elate and had told the story, wonder was the only thing that remained in their minds. They allowed all else to fade and die, for when there was another enrollment and Jesus was choosing his followers there were fishermen and tax collectors and a revolutionist, but not a shepherd among them. The tragedy of Christmas is here; that we share in the joy of it, behold the wonder of its goodwill and then spend the years refusing to join up with the King, to listen to His call and to follow Him. Heirs of centuries of privilege but refusers of responsibility for making Him Lord of His world proclaim us as heirs of the shepherds and not of the disciples.

FOUR HUNDRED YEARS.

Leaving Mount Sinai, the Israelitish people plunged into the wilderness journey that brought them to the southern borders of the land they coveted. Carefully exploring the territory, they received the reports of the spies that differed only in the advice of procedure. Caleb and Joshua were all for action while the rest counseled delay and impotency. The company voted to turn back, proving their unfitness as yet for nation building. Such a venture is always one of faith and those who fear are hopelessly handicapped. So Moses set to work training their children in the hard wilderness schools that left practically all the fathers in graves. When he had built up a force adequate to the renewed attempt, climbing among the mountains, giving a view of the territory, death claimed the old leader. He was ever a mountain man and the close came among scenes such as he had always loved. Joshua took up the march, crossed the Jordan, led in the capture of Jericho and then proceeded to battle for the territory in the south and north. He settled the tribes into place and gave Caleb his request for Hebron and its giants and its rugged fields for overcoming. Then came the near three centuries of tribal rule with Judges here and there and no centralized authority. They were disastrous years, yet showed growth in the mastery of the changes from men of tents to city dwellers and from herders and nomads to farmers and settlers. Slowly they conquered the inhabitants much as our forefathers did the Indians, but there were constant forays from without by those who wished to possess their wealth. The Judges were the strong figures brought out in such warfare, and Samson, Deborah, Othniel, Gideon and Jephthah left their record upon the storied pages.

Then Samuel emerged, the last and easily the greatest of the Judges, who became the Father of Israel. For under his leadership the scattered and often wrangling tribes were brought under one rule and a government was set up that lived until the final overthrow of the land after five hundred years of progressive and stable authority. To bring order out of chaos and to be the setter-up of two dynasties marks him as one of the world's great. The finer side of the situation is revealed in the beautiful story of Ruth, but even here dire poverty stalks through the story and the idyllic situation is that of hearts rather than of the country as a whole. But all shows great progress since the slaves began their journey toward citizenship and nationhood.

THE REVIEW.

The primary group whose topic is "Favorite Stories of the Quarter," will be best treated by the use of pictures such as Perry or Wilde publish. These will be used as means of recall and will be passed on for permanent keeping by the pupils. For the Juniors with "Stories of Israel's Leaders," drill work with map or with cards bearing the names used, to be secured by those giving the most facts about the person represented, may be used. Question slips may serve the same purpose. Or impersonations may be planned. Each of the members is given a secret assignment of one of the characters that he is to impersonate while the class guesses who it is. The Intermediates and Seniors who have "Great Men and Women of the Quarter," will be interested in biographical essays, in dramatic presentation, in class and inter-class contests under rules like that of the old spelling match, in an imaginary journey to various points on the map while the guide brings out the happenings by questions, or various members have been assigned to be city guides and show the class nround the points of interest. Older classes will be glad to get an understanding of the books covered, the teachings that have been learned thru the lessons. Always there is the lesson by lesson covering of the material but time is lacking for any more than the briefest touching of any one of them. It is better to group them along the line of the history covered rather than attempt to have them all in order. However it be done, in whatever group, let it lead to the presenting of the call for dedication of life to God for service as these men dedicated themselves; to the acceptance of Christ as Lord and uniting with the Church as evidence of it.

COOLIDGE-MELLON TAX PLAN.

Commented on by J. W. McCULLOUGH

The President starts out immediately after the November election to give the big incorporations a $250,000,000.00 tax refund, notwithstanding statistics show that twelve large concerns closed their books within the last year showing over a billion dollars profit, and forty-five smaller concerns show a net profit from $10,000,000.00 to $40,000,000.00, making in the aggregate a total sum of at least $235,000,000,000.00 profits, after charging off all legitimate expenses, including all Federal income and no doubt tremendous salaries to their presidents and directors and all office holders. This is natural, to keep down excess income to the government. But after all this, they had over $235,000,000,000.00 profits, which absorb practically all the nation's earnings, after the cost of living and depreciation is deducted. This tremendous sum of money being earned by less than sixty corporations through a tariff barrier and the American people, through inflated values and excessive profits, paid into their treasuries the sum of over $237,000,000,000.00, after deducting the amounts that went into the Federal income tax. That money surely belongs to the people, and it has been earned by them on a fair basis and should be paid on the National debt, for which the people are responsible.

The President, after being repudiated in many parts of the country when the election returns came in, to quickly make himself popular again, the idea struck him for further economy and tax reduction to the same big interests that he has formerly been catering to, and the same people that have been receiving practically all the nation's earnings since the Fordney-McCumber tariff law went into effect, and now he would like to take the people's money out of the Treasury and give it back to the large corporations, because his economy rests with them. He wants their friendship and publicity in the daily press, which is practically controlled by them. This makes cheap advertisement to keep his economy plan before the people and make him popular for the Presidential campaign in 1928.

I agree with the treasurer, Mr. A. W. Mellon, the money in the Treasury, along with the money to be collected at home or from foreign nations that can be spared after the expenses of government are paid, should be paid on the National debt. This tremendous National debt was created when we had inflated values and chap dollars, and it should be paid with the same kind of coin, or as much of it as possible, while prosperity lasts. I feel satisfied before the last of this debt is paid, a dollar will be worth a hundred cents, and it will be harder to pay then than when it was contracted, or even now.

I feel Mr. Mellon is a great Treasurer, and a very far seeing man, and there isn't any question but what he is one of the largest stockholders in the nation among the large incorporations, and he naturally feels very much interested in their future success. I have come to the following conclusion: Mr. Mellon is more interested in future national income tax reduction than the present distribution of funds, for the following reasons: He being one of the largest stockholders in the mammoth incorporations, naturally would like to have the national income tax reduced further, if not repealed entirely. I fully believe now, Mr. Mellon's idea is to use all the available money possible to pay off the national debt, and to pay off all the securities in advance of their maturities, a matter of some four years, so he can go before Congress and show them the national income tax rate is too high, and have it reduced, and if possible have it repealed altogether. There is no question that Mr. Mellon's past records show he is not in sympathy with this law, and would like to see it off the statute books.

The Federal income tax law is a Democratic measure put on the statute books during President Wilson's administration, and it is one of the most just taxation laws ever put on our statute books. When an incorporation or an individual does not make large profits they have nothing to pay, and when they do make huge profits it comes off the public, and the public has a right to demand this profit be paid to maintain the government.

I feel that the President and the Treasurer are in full accord with each other, as far as taking care of the Big Interests are concerned, but the President is in urgent demand for personal relief before campaign time comes, but the Treasurer prefers taking a slower and more permanent method to give the Big Interests lasting relief.

There is another matter I want to draw to the public's attention, that is, the Farmer's Government Co-operative Marketing Plan. There will never be any permanent relief worked out of this plan. There might be a system worked out that would give the farmer temporary relief, but it would revert on the American consuming public. The American masses would have to pay the gains the farmer gets. London and Liverpool control the world's markets in which the American farmer has to sell his surplus, and no co-operative plan can change it. This discussion has been going on for years, ever since the Harding-Coolidge administrations have been in effect it has been material for interesting discussions, and has kept the farmer believing he is going to get relief, but so far has utterly failed. But it has been good campaign dope for years to keep the public's mind off the main issues.

I feel it is about time for the American people to look the situation fairly in the face, and go after the trouble with open hands and gloves off. There is no question in my mind where our trouble lies. It is in too high tariff, and in railroad rates being too high. Tariff should be reduced on all commodities from 33 to 50 per cent. This would give our manufacturers plenty of margin to pay labor high wages, and give the consuming public a piece of goods at a reasonable price, and still have a nice profit left for the manufacturer. Why was it necessary when the Harding administration got in power to make the highest schedule of tariff prices in the history of our country? Was the administration afraid of a bankrupt world taking their business from them, with over one half of the world's resources, and three fourths of the world's machinery, and over half of the world's securities within our borders? Or was it because the American people had been prosperous, and the producing classes had been prosperous and had good bank accounts. Money was cheap, goods were high. At the close of the world war our wholesale ware houses and retail stores were practically empty, and when the big interests got in power they saw their chance to build a tariff wall around our country and force the masses of people to pay outrageous prices for what they had to have. Consequently, the big manufacturers have in the past six years practically accumulated all the wealth from the masses from the war period time.

The railroads went hand in hand with other big business during the war period, with high costs of all kinds. The freight and passenger rates were raised to meet the conditions, and now they should be reduced. Passenger and Pullman car rates should be reduced 33 per cent. and freight rates should be reduced from 33 to 50 per cent., but during the last two Administrations the big interests and the railroads have controlled Congress. Big business wants high tariff, and the railroads consume over 60 percent of the steel and iron manufactured, and they are satisfied to pay double freight rates for what they haul, and the consuming public pays the bills.

These are the conditions that prevailed during the Harding and Coolidge Administrations. The so-called Big Business and the railroads have accumulated the earnings of the Nation and even more than that, the have gathered in their fold, practically all the profits from the masses of the people of the nation, that was saved up during the war period.

How long will these conditions last? they will last as long as the big interests and railroads can control Congress and the Senate. They got a hard slap the last election but possibly great manufacturing States like Pennsylvania and Illinois, the big Interests may be able to spend a few millions out of the billions they accumulate, to send a few new members to Washington to keep them in control. This is a matter that will be determined when the new Senate meets.

SPRING GLADE

We have been having some very cold, disagreeable weather in recent days, which has brought to mind the coming of Christmas, which event is fondly looked forward to by the children, and all of us are children at this glad season.

The Christmas program, which was given at Armistead school Saturday night by the pupils of Armistead and Spring Glade schools, was well attended and all those present had an enjoyable evening.

Mr. Samuel Inman, of Lewisburg, Pa., who has been here on a visit to his brother-in-law, Mr. H. C. DeWitt, for the past week, left Saturday for Los Angeles, California, where he expects to spend the remainder of the winter.

Mr. Burns Flanigan, who has been employed at Kempton for some time, spent the week-end here with home folks.

Miss Lucille Brown was a guest of Miss Violet DeWitt on Wednesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. DeWitt and family were guests at the home of W. W. Groves, Sunday.

CHRISTMAS—NOT "XMAS."

Saturday, December 25, 1926, Christmas day, is the day in which practically all nations celebrate the coming of the Savior of man. Christmas joy will be in the hearts of the people and they will want to express this joy to everybody they meet. How will they exxpress it? "Merry Christmas", or "Merry Xmas"?

If you are in doubt, say Merry Christmas, if you have been saying Merry Xmas, change it—if you have always said Merry Christmas, keep it up.

The word "Xmas," a very meaningless term, is encroaching upon the original word so much that if something is not done the significance of the occasion of Christmas will in the future be lost sight of. "X" can stand for anything. It is the algebraic sign for any unknown quantity and, therefore, cannot be appropriately used as a substitute for "Christ" as he is not an unknown quantity.

It is known that nineteen hundred twety-six years ago, Christ was born in Bethlehem and it is in celebration of this event that the world has a Christmas day. There is nothing uncertain about that. The idea then of "X" taking the place of "Christ" in the word is adsurd.

How or when it originated will probably never be known. "X" is much shorter and much easier to write than "Christ" and it is therefore supposed that the basic reason for this substitution was the familiar word "laziness." When one had several hundred cards on which to write Merry Christmas, it required no persuasion to make the word shorter, yet while a little time was saved the meaning of the word gradually began to lose its former dignity and meaning. Continued practice of this has made "Xmas" a very much used word at the present time.

Take "Christ" out of the word Christmas and nothing is left, no matter what is substituted in place of it. Xmas could just as well stand for the birth of a nation or practically anything else.

Think what the word Christmas signifies, then take a little extra time and write it out in full.

WHO SAYS THERE IS NO SANTA CLAUS?

"I am one of those of God's children," William Allen White told the young men and the young women of Kansas University recently, "who believe in Santa Claus."

We all believe in Santa Claus. The world believes in Santa Claus, and we are glad of it. We wouldn't live in a world that didn't believe in Santa Claus.

Laugh at it as we may; hand it back to the kindergarten and the primary class as a tale that belongs to the children, nevertheless we know there is a Santa Claus and we love him.

A meek and humble reporter, who gained an audience one day last week with the governor of Kansas, seeking an interview on grave and mighty questions of state, was greeted with this salutation:

"I have been looking at that picture of Santa Claus in your paper, and reading the story, I am bound to see him when he comes to Kansas City this year."

On a train running out of Kansas City an eminent scientist in the medical world, member of the faculty of a great university, carried a big box labeled "books."

"Not really books," he explained mysteriously, "but Christmas presents for the family. I camouflage them this way in order to keep them until Christmas morning."

Sly old medical scientist, who would scoff publicly at the fact of a real Santa Claus, but known down in his heart that there is one!

In the business district a woman who rode to the store in a limousine, driven by a uniformed chauffeur, stood beside a woman at the Christmas toy counter who had come down town in a street car and who timed her shopping by the store clock, lest her transfer slip expired by the faith expressed hy the Emporia editor—There is a Santa Claus!

Evolutionist, fundamentalist, capital and lahor, Republican, Democrat, the ultra rich, the lowly poor—we all believe in Santa Claus, thank God, to the last penny of our spending money and the ultimate limit of our credit. Taking up the title of Mr. White's declaration of faith, we sing in chorus:

"Some say there ain't no Santa Claus, but we know darn well there is!"—Kansas City Star.

Parents are cordially invited to visit us while at work.

The Parent-Teacher Association met on Friday evening, December 10. At a former meeting there were but three of those present who were parents with children in school. This a deplorable state and as long as it continues little can be accomplished, regardless of how devoted the officers and teachers are to the cause.

The object of the Association is primarily to bring the parents into closer touch and harmony with the school. Are you, as parents, living up to your obligations are are you merely obeying the law by sending your child to school?

Parents and teachers everywhere are beginning to realize that the aims of education can be acquired only thru co-operation and in order to co-operate, parents will have to study the local school, its needs, plans and its methods. They need to know that not only their moral but their active support will be necessary.

On the other hand, the teachers must know what the parents are thinking and feeling about the methods of teaching, the course of study and discipline. They must know something of the child's home life, and, lastly, they must have the "good will" of the community.

The Parent-Teacher Association is distinctly not a "ladies' aid." Fathers should know as much about what and how his children are being taught as the mothers. Money alone will not pay the debt you owe your schools.

Criticism often comes from those who never enter a school room, but depend upon gossip for their information; but first hand information is best, therefore parents will, if really interested, visit their schools.

Not only parents, but all persons interested in better schools and more ideal conditions are requested to attend our next meeting.

C. R. SMITH, Principal.

Maryland's Mothers and Babies.

Care of the mothers-to-be as a means of safeguarding the lives and health of both mothers and babies in Maryland, is urged by Dr. J H. M. Knox, Jr., chief of the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health "One of the greatest problems in public health," he said, "is to save the lives of infants. Each year, in the counties of Maryland, there are about fifteen hundred deaths among children under a year old, or approximately one out of every twelve born alive.

"The surprising fact about this large loss of life is that nearly one-half of it occurs in babies less than a month old. The improvement that has taken place in the milk supply and the better understanding on the part of mothers of baby hygiene and baby care and baby feeding, have cut down the death rate among the older babies, but they have not affected the death rate during the first few weeks of a baby's life.

"Doctors and others who have worked among mothers and babies have learned that many of these little lives can be saved only when the mothers are properly advised and are cared for before the babies are born.

"Some interesting figures have recently been published that were gathered in Pennsylvania and that are of interest to every mother in Maryland. A survey made in twenty-five cities showed that only eight per cent of the mothers had received proper instruction before their babies were born. Among these mothers there were no deaths. Among the other 4242 women who did not have such advice, one woman in every ninety-six lost her life at the birth of her baby, and in this last group there were six times as many baby deaths as in the number born to mothers who had prenatal care. Moreover, the number of babies born dead and the number of babies who died within a month was four times as great among the group of mothers who had not received this timely advice.

"These figures are just as true in Maryland. And our doctors here have long recognized the importance of timely instruction of the mother-to-be. No other method will so effectively save the lives of women and children now being lost. It would be a blessing if women's clubs and other organizations could bring these facts home to every woman in the State."

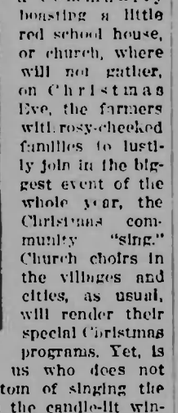
A Merry Christmas To One and All

Old Songs of Yule

by Frances Marshall Morgan

AS CHRISTMAS EVE draws near in every civilized land there is the customary revival of interest in the beloved old songs and carols that for hundreds of years have gladdened the hearts of men.



Back into the mists of the ages must we delve in our search for records of the first Christmas carol. We find that the pagans had chants that they sang at the season of the year when days were shortest. There is the song of Isaiah, beginning, "Sing, Oh Heaven, Be Joyful, Oh Earth!" And there is the song of Micah, dating seven centuries before Christ's birth. Tradition says that the oldest of all Christian hymns was sung by the angels above the fields of Bethlehem and later by the barbarian martyrs in the arena at Rome.

Today the singing of Christmas carols is almost a universal custom. There is scarce a community boasting a little red school house, or church, where will not gather, on Christmas Eve, the farmers with rosy-cheeked families to lustily join in the biggest event of the whole year, the Christmas community "sing." Church choirs in the villages and cities, as usual, will render their special Christmas programs. Yet, is there one among us who does not best love the custom of singing the old songs beneath the candle-lit window, for "sweet charity's sake"?

With the thought of the little bands of singers soon to start on their pilgrimages, from door to door, giving of their talents to the poor, there comes to mind the old English custom still observed in rural communities, although the cities know it no more. These little bands of carolers, called waits, sang the identical songs that every Englishman loves today, although they were first heard centuries ago. It is one of the picturesque English customs that have survived through the ages.

The radio's discovery brought with it an immense revival of interest in the Christmas carol. Thousands upon thousands of folk who will sit at their fireside on Christmas Eve eager to "listen in" are becoming familiar with the ancient carols and Christmas songs in a way that could not be possible before its advent. Last year the broadcasting of Christmas songs by world famous artists was one of the most delightful events connected with the pleasures of the season. The old carols were the features of the programs. This year, as last, the most beautiful Christmas song will probably be "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem," Phillips Brooks' masterpiece, the most popular of all the many and lovely numbers sent over the air. This song is probably the best loved modern composition, dealing with the birth of Christ. "When Shepherds Watched Their Flocks by Night," is the oldest carol written in our language. It is the work of Nahum Tate, poet laureate of England in 1692.

France, Italy, Wales and Ireland, it is said, are among the countries that cling closest to the custom of carol singing. France calls her Christmas songs "noels," from "natilis" which signified, originally a cry of joy at Christmas.

Many of the famous old Christmas songs are cheerful, heartwarming and suggestive of the good times of the season. However, the most beautiful and best loved are the carols that breathe a spirit of reverence and tell in simple words the story of the manger and God's gift to the whole world.

A Song for Christmas

By James Whitcomb Riley

CHANT me a rime of Christmas—
Sing me a jovial song—
And though it is filled with laughter,
Let it be pure and strong.

Sing of the hearts brimmed over
With the story of the day—
Of the echo of childish voices
That will not die away.

Of the blare of the tasseled bugle,
And the timeless clatter and beat
Of the drum that throbs to muster
Squadrons of scampering feet.

But, O, let your voice fall fainter,
Till, blent with a minor tone,
You temper your song with the beauty
Of the pity Christ hath shown.

And sing one verse for the voiceless;
And yet, ere the song be done,
A voice for the ears that hear not,
And a verse for the sightless one.

For though it be time for singing
A merry Christmas glee,
Let a low, sweet voice of pathos
Run through the melody.

Christmas, a God-Man, Said John Wanamaker

"Christmas is a man born—not a sentiment," said John Wanamaker. Too often we think of the birth of the Christ-child as a beautiful story, and we are apt to forget that the event we celebrate at the Christmastide is a historical fact. So many fairy tales have been woven into the original fabric that the truth is in danger of being obscured. Christmas is not a beautiful legend about a plump old man with white whiskers and a pack of toys on his back. Christmas is a God-man born into the world to give light and life, peace and joy—a reality that tops all realities.

Wrapping the Gift

If we do not wrap up a little love with our Christmas gift what is the use?

THE Prince of Good Fellows

A Christmas Thought

By Tudor Jenks

WHEN mother-love makes all things bright,
When joy comes with the morning light,
When children gather round their tree,
Thou Christmas Babe,
We sing of Thee!

When manhood's brows are bent in thought
To learn what men of old have taught,
When eager hands seek wisdom's key,
Wise Temple Child,
We learn of Thee!

When doubts assail, and perils fright,
When groping blindly in the night,
We strive to read life's mystery,
Man of the Mount,
We turn to Thee!

When shadows of the valley fall,
When sin and death the soul appall,
One light we through the darkness see—
Christ on the Cross,
We cry to Thee!

And when the world shall pass away,
And dawns at length the perfect day,
In glory shall our souls made free,
Thou God enthroned,
Then worship Thee.

Dolls Replicas of Peasants

The smallest member of the household, whether of the masculine or feminine persuasion, will delight in amusing dolls which come from central Europe. They are dressed in peasant costumes of felt which have appliqued designs in many colors. They are exact replicas of peasant children and have the quaintest little faces.

Had Him Guessing

Mr. Wise—What did your mother give you for Christmas?

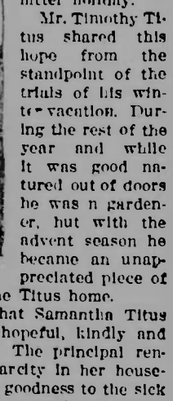
Her Christmas Wish

By Christopher G. Hazard



MRS. TIMOTHY TITUS was hanging out the clothes in the keen December wind and Mr. Frost was freezing them stiff as fast as possible. A clothespin in her mouth did not prevent the good woman from singing "I Want to Be an Angel," and her daughter Anna, as she brought out the rest of the wash, hoped that the desire thus expressed would soon be granted. For it must be confessed that the life of the Titus family was not a happy one. Care had written wrinkles on the mother's face and also upon her disposition. Nothing could have looked sweeter in Christmas prospect to the Titus household than something angelic, but all of them, from the old man down to Peggy, felt that it depended upon ma; so that this strain from the back yard had a note of hope in it, over against the probability of another wintry and bitter holiday.

Mr. Timothy Titus shared this hope from the standpoint of the trials of his winter vacation. During the rest of the year and while it was good natured out of doors he was a gardener, but with the advent season he became an unappreciated piece of furniture about the Titus home.

The fact was that Samantha Titus was, at heart, a hopeful, kindly and generous woman. The principal reason of present scarcity in her household had been her goodness to the sick and poor within her reach. A neighbor had remarked upon her liberality by saying that "'Manthy Titus gave away in the winter all that Tim Titus could get out of summer," and that "she not only gave away all the profits, but was ready to give away all the apostles besides." Her song on that cold day did not indicate that she felt satisfied with herself, but rather that something of Christmas longing was really stirring within her.

Anyway, the wish might have been a prayer, for it was answered. As Anna put it afterward, "It seemed like what happened to the shepherds at Beth'lem." For Mrs. Titus got a new and happy idea in a peculiar way. She had been calling for a Mr. Saxe over the telephone for half the afternoon in vain, in order to collect a washing bill that might slightly improve the Christmas possibilities, when Anna humorously suggested that she might try the saxophone. The joke not only made her laugh, but it brought to her mind the thought that sometimes fortune punishes us for neglecting our relations to others by the failure of the resources that we have depended upon and rewards our use of new and untried means. This thought caused Mrs. Titus to put her pride in her empty pocket and pushed her out upon the flood of affection that reached as far as California. For her brother Sam, who had not heard a word from her for years, received a letter that was stained with a loving tear or two, and it was like a Christmas present for the far-away brother. It provoked a loving expression also, as love always does, and through it the Tituses began a new and relieved history. With Christmas time the burden of care and labor that had pressed so heavily fell off, and the angel that had been under it came out, as the smiling mother dressed old Timothy up for a Santa Claus and was merry with them all.

When Sam heard about it he felt like one of the Wise Men, even if he had hailed from the West, and sent his gifts ahead of him. It was worth the long journey to hear Peggy say that she thought he was the real Santa Claus and to kiss her rosy cheek.

QUESTION OF LOWER TAXES IS THE LEADING PROBLEM FOR STATE LEGISLATURE WHEN IT MEETS NEXT MONTH

Membership Is Made Up of Men Who Are Substantial Taxpayers—Assignment of Members to Committees Is Now Being Considered.

(From The Marylander)

There are mutterings and grumblings of discontent and dissatisfaction, not very loud, however, at the program proposed by some of the influential politicians for the organization of the General Assembly next month, as well as the presumed plans laid out for legislation during the three months of the session. There is nothing unusual about this, and, while some of the gentlemen who are in positions of influence, have no doubt expressed their views as to what they may desire to have done, they are wise enough to realize that all the propositions, made now, as to action when the legislators meet at Annapolis, are subject to change, when the preliminary conferences are held a few hours before the real work of the organization of the two houses takes place in the State House.

The men who are now in charge of the Democratic party organization, both city and State, are neither reckless nor foolish. It can be put down for a fact that they have no desire to start out the session at Annapolis next month with a row on their hands which might continue through the entire ninety days and jeopardize any program for legislation which they may have in view. Their desire, and they do not hesitate to express it, is to do all in their power to satisfy the different sections and interests, so far as it may be possible to do so, in order to maintain harmony in the party and minimize the friction which is sure to arise should any high-handed means be used by those in authority.

Minority Membership Unusually Strong

It should also be remembered that the minority in the house is unusually strong, and, while the Democrats swept the State so far as all the State offices are concerned, yet the Republicans have thirty-five members, which is nearly one-third of the House of Delegates, and have eight Senators, and it will be recalled that in times past the minority, which makes up the opposition, and a minority of the majority, have been known to combine and, by doing so have made up a majority of the whole and have played havoc with the plans of the leaders of the party in power. Such action is not uncommon in legislative bodies, it is of frequent occurrence in Congress, and has been done many times at Annapolis—no longer ago than the last session—the Republican contigent combining with a majority of the Democrats, and, on more than one occasion, upset the plans of the Governor and compelled His Excellency to resort to his veto to prevent the enactment of legislation of an unsatisfactory character. And experience has shown that such action is not dimcult to accomplish when there are disgruntled and sore-headed members around who may have grudges to satisfy. And political grudges and grudges arising from disappointment in politics, are among the worst and most lasting of all—and it often happens in legislative bodies that a majority of two-thirds may be necessary to carry a point, and in a situation like that which will exist at Annapolis, it may be a difficult proposition to secure a two-thirds vote, should there be even a small number of soreheads in a disappointed or hostile frame of mind arising from real or fancied grievances against the leaders who shall be in charge of party affairs.

To Exercise Care

An acquaintance with all the Democratic city and State leaders who have functioned for more than forty-five years, with an intimate acquaintance with the men who are now at the head of party affairs, who have been placed in charge of the situation, at least so far as the city is concerned, when it was extremely critical, warrants the statement that the greatest care will be exercised to prevent any dangerous friction, either in the organization of the two houses or in the planning of a program for legislation during the entire session. All the discussions heard among those whose influence will be powerful in legislative affairs, clearly indicate that an unusual spirit of conservatism will dominate them and that from the begining to the close of the Assembly that every effort will be used to prevent unwise or extravagant legislation, that, so far as possible, appropriations will be reduced to a minimum and that the rule to be followed in most cases will be not how can the Treasury stand but how much can it afford to expend on any one of the numerous propositions which will be proposed by the Governor in his budget, for while it is known that the General Assembly cannot increase the amounts set forth by His Excellency, it can reduce, or even wipe out, wherever it may deem necessary or advisable, to do so. As the membership is made up of more than the usual number of men who are substantial taxpayers and who are vitally interested, not only in preventing any raise in the tax rate, but, if possible, who will favor a material reduction in the levy, the people generally may rest assured that the chances for any extravagance will be reduced to the lowest possible point that no reckless and extravagant jobs will be allowed to go thru and that all appropriations will be kept down to the lowest possible figure, consistent with the well-being and absolutely necessary requirements of the government.

Public Outcry

The outcry at present, not only in the Nation but in the State, is loudly in favor of lower taxes. And the probabilities all indicate that this public outcry will be heeded by the General Assembly when it is in session from Wednesday, January 5, to Monday, April 4, when the final adjournment takes place.

BITTINGER

We expect next week to have a report of the capture and killing of a monster bear, as some persons brought news to this village last Sunday of the discovery of the trail of a bear which crossed Meadow Mountain not far from Bittinger. The report of the size of the tracks indicate that the animal is a large one and as all the brave men of the village are planning to hunt for him on Monday, no doubt he will be brought in by them.

As the result of exposure, said to be while in an intoxicated condition, one night last week, Winfield Snyder, a lad of fifteen years of age, is suffering from badly frozen feet. It is said that he was out several hours with the temperature standing several degrees below zero.

Doctors Gracy and Cowherd, of Cumberland, and Dr. N. R. Davis, of Grantsville, spent Friday of last week hunting in this neighborhood, but as the weather was not ideal for the sport, their success was limited to a very few birds.

Herbert Buckle, a student at Gettysburg, Pa., is home for his Christmas vacation, which he will spend with his parents here.

Miss Leonora Wiley made a shopping tour to Cumberland last Saturday.

John Beitzell spent last week in Oakland as a member of the jury.

Floyd Deal, the progressive automobile dealer of Grantsville, made a business visit to this village during the past week.

Turkeys are in good demand in this section and there are not enough birds to supply the demand.

The young ladies of The Busy Workers Sunday School Class are arranging to hold a festival in this village on the evening of December 31st, and they solicit the patronage of the general public.

A special Christmas Service will be held in the local Lutheran church Saturday evening, December 25th, and a good attendance is hoped for.

The coldest weather of the season was registered here last Friday morning when the mercury went down to twelve degrees below zero.

Mrs. Gus. Stanton, of this place, left for Akron, O., last Saturday where she will spend the Christmas season with her daughter.

We extend Christmas greetings to The Republican and all its readers.

And They Are Wed on Christmas Day

No Time Is Lost by Cupid in Bringing Hilda and Jack Together.

By MARION R. REAGAN

HILDA MAY GIBBONS settled back in the rather comfortable chair of the pullman car, and, as the great train thundered out of the station, gave herself over to the none-too-satisfying thoughts of the prospects of her future. She was going home for the Christmas holidays. It was her first trip back in three and a half years, for it is an expensive journey from Massachusetts to Colorado, and it was really all the Gibbonses could do to pay Hilda's tuition at Wellesley. Such luxuries as trips home for vacations were simply out of the question. However, as this was her last year in school and she intended working in New York after graduation in June, the money had to be spared for her to see the family once more.

Her heart leaped at the thought of seeing her mother and father again, but fell just as suddenly when she thought of meeting all the young people of the town. The Gibbonses were poor and really never had had a place in Boulton society. Not recognized by the wealthier families, they were too proud to associate themselves with either the poorest or even the middle class of the town. Now that Hilda had been away at a big eastern college, however, she would probably be invited to the holiday parties of the wealthier set. Either accepting or declining the invitations would be a little awkward for her, she thought, after being spurned by them for so many years.

And there was that Jack Elkins, the son of the richest man in Boulton. Hilda particularly didn't care to see him. He was the "catch" of the county, for, besides being extremely rich, he was musually attractive and had the gracious manners of a real gentleman. Hilda had always had a case on Jack, and the fact that she had never spoken to him and was simply not known by him, made it all the more intense. She used to dream about him when she was younger, and plan all sorts of meetings—happy occasions on which she was never at a loss for a witty phrase and on which she always completely "vamped" young Elkins.

And all this dreaming made her the more self-conscious. When she passed him on the street, for example, she would feel herself stiffening all over, and found it difficult even to walk normally, imagining he was looking at her. She always discovered when she looked back, however, that he had not really been looking at her at all, and was quite unconcernedly smoking his cigarette.

When the train stopped at Princeton Hilda felt a sudden tremor come over her. Jack was a student at Princeton and would probably be going home for Christmas. They might be riding on the same train! Almost unconsciously she leaned forward and looked into the narrow panel of the mirror to adjust her hat at the right angle.

She had just leaned back in her chair when the deep baritone of masculine voices informed her that several young men were on the platform of her train. The doors banged. The train moved on and a tall, well-dressed young man, preceded by a porter with a bag, passed her chair.

"Here, this is mine, isn't it?" he asked, indicating the chair exactly next to Hilda.

"Oh, yes, sah, yes, sah," answered the porter and quickly disposed of the baggage while the young man sank into the chair.

Timidly Hilda glanced in his direction. When she caught sight of him she couldn't suppress a little nervous cry of "oh!"

Jack Elkins turned. Hilda blushed a deep crimson and pretended not to see him. Jack continued to look at her for some seconds, evidently not displeased with the sight, and finally asked, "Pardon, but haven't I met you some place? Your face is so familiar!" And before Hilda could reply—"Oh, of course, now I know. You live in Boulton, don't you?"

"Yes, I live in Boulton," Hilda admitted stiffly, and put an end to what Elkins had hoped might develop into a conversation.

Almost an hour passed of complete silence between them. Then Elkins turned sharply in his chair. Something had gotten into his eye. Hilda offered her assistance and very carefully removed the annoying little cinder. The incident was enough to relieve her of her self-consciousness and their conversation became more genial. They discussed everything from poetry to politics. They had luncheon together on the train, and dinner. At the end of the evening when the porter came to make up their berths they said good night, feeling they had known each other for years and years, and more than that—been in love forever.

Hilda was just the kind of girl Elkins had been hoping to meet. It was too preposterous to think of their both living almost side by side for all these years and never really meeting until now.

The next morning they had breakfast together and continued to talk for several hours until the train finally arrived in Denver at noon.

Some of the ladies of Boulton, who had come into Denver to shop that day, were rather surprised to see young Jack Elkins and Hilda Gibbons in a large jewelry shop looking at diamond rings. But when they returned home that night and heard that most startling news—that Jack Elkins and Hilda Gibbons would be married Christmas morning, they were almost overcome.

Christmas morning when Hilda walked down the aisle of the little church, leaning slightly on Jack's arm, the envy of every girl in Boulton, the picture of perfect happiness, she turned to Jack. "Dear, we'll be the leaders of Boulton society now; let's always invite everybody to our parties—rich and poor—shall we?"

"Of course, dear; we shall do whatever you say," was his answer.

He—I'm going to give you a Christmas present this year that no money can buy.

She—I prefer one that some money can buy.

"Santa Claus" is a corruption which originated apparently in Flanders or possibly among the Dutch, of the name of St. Nicholas, a saint noted for his love of children and his boundless charity. His "day" was perhaps December 8, originally, but since the displacement of Old Father Christmas, the British representation of the Christmas spirit, he is celebrated almost universally as the Christmas Saint.

When Santa Comes

At Christmas, when Santa Claus comes down the chimney, he usually leaves poor pa up a tree.—Father Sage.

Always Room

Until the time runs out there is always room for more Christmas shoppers.

Christmas, Mistletoe —the Kissing Custom

Since the Christian era, mistletoe was dedicated to Christmas time. With it went the custom of kissing under the white-berried plant, probably a survival of the saturnalia of pagan rites.

But the Christian elders decided that when the churches were decorated with mistletoe, there was too much kissing going on during the services and too many requests for the wedding service.

So they abolished mistletoe and hung up in its stead holly, to signify the dark monotony and many thorns of matrimony. But the mistletoe stayed in the homes at Christmas, and so did the kissing custom.

It is bad luck for a maiden to stand under the mistletoe and not be kissed. It means that she will not be married that year.

Naturally

"Have you been doing your holiday shopping early?"

"Well, not of late."

What's the Answer?

Wifey—Remember that old millionaire wanted to marry me?

Hubby—Yes.

"And how easily you got me away from him?"

"Bet your life I do, ha! ha!"

"Well, he married that Flossie Flapper you used to like pretty well and has just bought her a set of sables for Christmas."

Hard to Figure Out

It is hard to figure out why it is that Santa Claus was not created in the form of a woman.

WIRES, TREES AND OTHER PROPERTY LOSS BY SLEET

Storm Damage to Electric and Telephone Lines In All Parts Of Garrett County Resulted

One house was slightly damaged, telephone and telegraph wires and two electric lines of the Penn Public Service System were torn down by the wind, rain, sleet and snow storm of early Sunday morning in and around Garrett county, according to information received. The cost of repairing the lines will run over $1,000, it was stated.

Accident was without lights Sunday night but power was restored Monday. There was a break in the electric lines between Hoyes and Accident and one on the main line between the power house on Deep Creek and Johnstown, Pa. The Accident Mutual Telephone association, which renders service to the northern part of the county and connects with the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone company at Oakland, reported many lines down due to the weight of ice and fallen trees. Several hundred dollars will be required to restore normal service to the people who use this service.

A number of telephone poles were down in the vicinity of Terra Alta, West Va., while at Deer Park, 33 telephones and 8 lines were still out of order at noon Tuesday. Complete service has been restored at this time, including the long distance lines out of Oakland, which were repaired first.

The bus schedule was several hours behind time most of Sunday, trees and telephone poles across the highways being accountable for this delay. One tree, falling across one side of the residence of John S. Gnegy, did some damage and caused quite a little concern to the occupants.

Mr. Henry P. Miller, Retiring Member of the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett County, Expresses His Thanks for the Support and Co-operation of the Citizens of the County As a Public Official.

To the People of Garrett County:

In voluntarily retiring from the office of County Commissioner at the close of the second term to which I was elected five years ago by the citizens of Garrett county, I desire to express my thanks and appreciation for the support and co-operation given me.

The office of County Commisioner of Garrett county has become one of considerable importance and those who occupy the position are faced with the problem of keeping the tax rate down and at the same time providing sufficient funds for good roads, schools and the other proper demands of the county. To satisfactorily meet this problem the Commissioners constantly need the co-operation of those whom they represent. This in large measure I have had and I wish in this manner to thank those who gave it and to ask the same kindly consideration and support for my successors.

Respectfully yours,
H. P. MILLER.

He was then taken to Dr. Broadwater's office where he was cared for until Thursday afternoon when he was taken to the home of his daughter at Grafton, West Va.

The break occurred between his ankle and knee and due to Mr. Wallace's age, will take some time to heal, it was stated.

MARRIED.

Smart—Getty—A very pretty and impressive wedding was solemnized at St. Stephen's Catholic church, in Grantsville, at 9:00 o'clock Monday morning, when Miss Angela Dorsey Getty, eldest daughter of the late J. O. Getty and Mrs. Annie Getty became the bride of James K. Smart, son of Mrs. Mary Emily Smart, of Grenolden, near Philadelphia, Pa.

The nuptial mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Clarence, assisted by Rev. Father Brady, of Meversdale, Pa. The choir of St. Stephen's church sang and Miss Anna McKenzie played Mendelsshon's wedding march. Miss Lulu Pope sang "I Love You Truly" during the ceremony. Mrs. Joseph F. Fahey, sister of the bride, was matron of honor and Frank D. Getty, her brother, was best man.

The bride was attired in an ashes of roses gown of georgette crepe and panne velvet and silver hat and carried a corsage bouquet of pink roses. The matron of honor was attired in a blue georgette gown and carried a corsage bouquet of tea roses.

Mrs. Smart is a graduate of Maryland State Normal School, Frostburg, and received her A. B. degree from the Maryland University, at College Park. She was a member of the faculty of Grantsville High School for the past two years and a very popular teacher in Garrett county.

Mr. Smart is an adjuster for the Pennsylvania Manufacturing Association Casualty Insurance Company, and is also a paving contractor of Philadelphia. He is a World War veteran, having enlisted in the Third Infantry Officers' Training Corps and was a lieutenant in the Q. M. C. at Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Florida, and served overseas several months with his command.

Following the ceremony, a breakfast was served at the bride's home, with a reception, when the couple left for New York, Atlantic City and other points. They will make their home in Phildelphia.

Zehner—Yohner—Mrs. Edith Yohner and Roy H. Zehner, both of Pittsburgh, Pa., were married in Frostburg on December 24th, at the Lutheran parsonage by Rev. Paul A. Weidley. The groom's sister, Miss Esther Zehner, of Grantsville, was the attendant of the bride. The young eouple spent several days in Grantsville with the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Zehner, before returning to Pittsburgh, where they will make their home.

Menhorn—Chapin—A pretty wedding took place at the home of the bride in Akron, Ohio, on December 24th when Miss Geraldine Chapin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Chapin, became the wife of Mr. William McClelland Menhorn, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Menhorn, of Oakland. The couple came to Oakland on the wedding trip and were guests at the home of the groom's parents until Tuesday, when they returned to Akron.

Infant Breaks Collarbone.

Little Ann Lawrence,16 months old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Lawrence, suffered a fracture of her collarbone last evening at the home of Dr. Henry W. McComas, her grandfather. Henry McComas, Jr., was leading the infant from one room in the house to another when she twisted her body and caused the fracture. The baby is resting surprisingly easy at this time.

NEW FIRE FIGHTING EQUIPMENT GIVEN SEVERE TEST

Performance of Oakland's New Motorized Engine Answered Every Test Required of It

"The test has exceeded all expectations," exclaimed Fire Chief George Kerins after the new Locomobile fire truck, received by the municipality of Oakland one day last week, had been given a thorough trial of its ability to perform according to the claims made by the manufacturers on Tuesday afternoon of this week.

The initial test of the machine was made on Oak street near the Little Youghiogheny River bridge, while the second test was made half way up the hill toward Crook's Crest.

At the bridge, the motor raised the water twenty feet from the river to the pump which then threw it from the attached nozzle under a pressure of 190 pounds to the square inch. Following the attachment of a second hose the pressure remained at 95 pounds approximately. Considering this a success and up to specifications, the fire department then moved the engine to Crook's Crest, where the hose was attached to a fire hydrant. Without the use of the pump, the water went barely twenty feet skyward, but with it in action the water fairly "shot" heavenward, rising to a height of over a hundred feet, according to bystanders.

The members of the department consider this test as extremely successful and satisfactory, and it was predicted that the fire loss would be lessened by one-half at least. The motor worked perfectly and exceeded the expectations of even the most enthusiastic members of the department.

Diphtheria Prevention.

How many boys and girls in Garrett county are ready for the toxin-antitoxin treatment to be started in the local schools on January 5th?

Parents of all children in the parochial school in Oakland have signed the consent slips sent them, therefore making that school 100 per cent. In the Oakland Grammar school only 69 out of the enrollment of 237 have returned the slips signed.

It is the desire of the public health authorities for parents to sign these slips at once and to see that they are returned to the proper teacher in the school. In this way the children will be fully protected from diphtheria.

The treatment is given free of all charge to the school children who bring a slip signed by their parents to the school. Parents are also urged to bring all pre-school children to these clinics likewise.

This treatment is given in three doses one week apart and is to be started at the Grammar school in Oa started at the Oakland Grammar school on January 5th at ten o'clock in the morning of that day and at the parochial school at one o'clock in the afternoon.

Both schools should be in the 100 per cent class.

Kitzmiller Marines Guarding U. S. Mails.

Among the U. S. Marines who were first selected to guard the mails against possible attacks by bandits are James L. McDonald and James Thompson Walker, of Kitzmiller. They are among several picked men who began guarding the mails shortly after President Coolidge had given his approval. They are now furnishing protection to the mails in transit, guarding important postal eenters and insuring the safe delivery of valuable mail packages.

McDonald lived at the home of his sister, Mrs. Margaret M. Sollars, and Walker with his mother, Mrs. Bessie Walker, in Kitzmiller, before they joined the Marine Corps at Cumberland several months ago. The former was stationed at Quantico, Va., and the latter at Philadelphia when they joined the mail guards.

It is the first time Marines have guarded the mails since November, 1921, when they were assigned this task for about four months. During this period no mail robberies occurred.

Fowler, in Oakland, with whom she had made her home for some time. The deceased was a member of the Lutheran church at Texas, West Va., from which edifice she was buried this morning, Rev. Charles A. Shilke, pastor of the local Lutheran church, conducting the services.

ESCAPED POSSIBLE DEATH THRU ABSENCE FROM POST

Harry Nutter, Paymaster for Coal Company at Kempton, Intended Victim of Foreigner

By not being where he was supposed to be, Harry Nutter, paymaster for the Davis Coal and Coke Company at its Kempton (Md.) mine, escaped serious injury and probably instant death on Christmas eve.

Three bullets, alleged to have been fired by Nick Koker through a frosted window at the office of the coal company and in the direction of the desk where the paymaster usually sat, failed of their mark because the paymaster was not there at the time.

Nick Koker, a foreigner, whose nationality is not known, and who was employed as a miner at the coal company's plant, is said to have been indebted for supplies at the company store. The amount due was deducted from his pay check and the difference given him at the last pay-day. This action did not create a very favorable impression upon Nick and it is alleged that he threatened to kill both the paymsater and Mr. Schell, the store manager.

Upon going to the office building and firing three shots through the window, he is said to have gone to the home of Mr. Schell and fired upon his house, but little damage was done.

Warrants for the arrest of Koker were issued by Justice West in Oakland, following which he was placed under arrest by Constables Wotring, of Kempton, and Shartzer, of Oakland, the man being found at his home located in the woods about a mile from Kempton. He was brought to Oakland and given a hearing before Justice E. I. West upon the charge of disturbing the peace and was held in the sum of $800. He then asked for a change of venue and was taken before Justice W. A. Gonder, who placed him under another bond in the sum of $400, an additional charge having been preferred by the State. Koker then prayed a jury trial and in lieu of the $1200 bond he was placed in the Garrett County Jail. Should he fail to furnish the bond as directed by the Justices he will be compelled to remain in jail until the June term of the Circuit Court.

Parochial School Children Have Christmas Entertainment

The recitations given in unison by the various grades were noteworthy, showing that the pupils had received careful drill in clear enunciation and expressive delivery. The songs of the choruses were sung with a beauty of interpretation and a finish that would have done credit to schools in the larger centres That there was not a halt or that not one pupils required prompting during the entire program made the afternoon a happy one for every pupil as well as the audience.

No Trace Of Stolen Car.

No trace of the Chevrolet Coupe, which was stolen from in front of the Maryland Theatre Monday evening, December 20, has been found, according to W. D. Casteel, sheriff. Search for the automobile is still going forward, however, and it is hoped that the culprit will be found in a few days.

The car is owned by Paul B. Naylor and was stolen from him while he was inside the theatre building. The car was not locked and Mr. Naylor carried no insurance on it.

LAD LOSES THE GREATER PORTION OF LEFT HAND

When Old Shotgun Exploded As He Fired It Sunday Morning

Christmas, 1926, ended rather disastrously for Kenneth Frohman, 16 years of age, when a double-barreled shotgun exploded in his hands, severing three fingers and a portion of the palm of his left hand, on Sunday morning last at 9:00 o'clock. The youth, who lives with his grandmother, Mrs. Mary E. Rhodes, at North Glade, near Swanton, was brought to Oakland where an examination and first aid was rendered by Dr. M. C. Hinebaugh. He was later sent to the Western Maryland Hospital in Cumberland, where an operation was performed. Late reports indicate that the boy is doing nicely and that in all probability the thumb and index finger of his injured hand will be saved. He will remain in the hospital at least ten days.

The firearm which exploded was an old type and had been loaded for some time. Young Frohman took the gun out to fire it and aimed it as he pulled the trigger, supporting the weapon with his left hand, the explosion taking place at the point of contact.

The boy's parents are divorced. His twin sister resides with his mother, Mrs. Molly Pase, at Thomas, West Va.

FORMER OAKLANDER KILLS HIMSELF ACCIDENTALLY

William Roy Beamer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Beamer, now of Cumberland, but who resided in Oakland prior to moving to Cumberland a number of years ago, was the victim of an accidentally self-inflicted revolver shot at Ardmore, a suburb of Philadelphia on Christmas eve. Within twenty minutes after the shot was fired the young man was dead.

Beamer, who was assistant manager of the theatre, was handling the pistol when talking to a young woman usher and the latter had warned him to put the gun away as it might be loaded, according to a statement made by the policeman who was upon the scene a few minutes afterwards. Beamer, it is said, acceeding to the wishes of the young woman, was in the act of putting the firearm in a safe place when it was accidentally discharged ,the bullet entering his temple,

At the same time his wife was at their home in Merwood, Delaware county, Pa., hanging Christmas decorations for their three-months-old baby. Beamer had been a resident of Philadelphia about five years and was married to a Philadelphia girl about four years ago.

His parents and two sisters, Miss Ella G. Beamer, a registered nurse and day supervisor at the Western Maryland Hospital, Mrs. Vernon Casteel, and a younger brother, reside in Cumberland.

He served overseas during the World War as a member of the Second Division, U. S. Marines, having enlisted in Cumberland in 1917. After his honorable discharge he was employed for a time in Cumberland.

Although reported dead in the crossing crash with a Baltimore and Ohio train Christmas Eve near Reedsville, West Va., in which her father, William Morris, was instantly killed, Miss Margaret Morris will recover, with the loss of the sight of one eye, according to reports from the Morgantown City Hospital, where she was taken after the accident.

Miss Morris was driving home from a Christmas entertainment at her school when her car was hit by the train.

Funeral services for her father were held Tuesday at the M. E. church, Reedsville, with interment in the Kingwood cemetery.

Roselle and Emerson Bishoff and Rose Rice are among the college students who are spending the holiday season in Oakland with their parents.

Miss Laura M. Smith spent the Christmas vacation with her sister, Mrs. J. H. Leavy, at Harper's Ferry, W. Va. From there Miss Smith went to Baltimore where she purchased a line of hats for her early spring trade, returning to Oakland Tuesday.

CHARLES A. DEFFINBAUGH DIED SUDDENLY LAST NIGHT

Former Postmaster and Oakland Editor Succumbed To Heart Attack at His Home.

Charles A. Deffinbaugh, aged 58 years, editor in chief of the Mountain Democrat, and for many years a citizen of Oakland, died at his home on Second street, following an illness of less than ten days. Death was due to a heart attack. He became ill on Friday, December 24, but recuperated sufficiently to return to his office for a short time on Tuesday. He became worse, however, and was forced to remain at home since that time.

His death was a distinct shock to the people of Oakland and Garrett county for he was prominent in civic activities. Funeral arrangements had not been completed at an early hour this morning, but it is understood that the funeral will be held on Saturday morning at 10:30 o'clock from the home of the Misses Miller on Second street.

Mr. Deffinbaugh, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Deffinbaugh, was born at Frostburg, Md., in 1868. He received his preliminary schooling there and moved to Oakland when about 16 years of age and engaged in newspaper work on The Republican staff, working under Capt. James A. Hayden, founder of the paper.

Engaged In Newspaper Work.

After working for The Republican for a short time, he went to Cumberland and continued his newspaper work in the Daily News until about 1895 when he returned to Oakland as the employee of the late James M. Litzinger, owner of the Mountain Democrat. In the year 1900 he purchased the paper and has been its editor since that time with the exception of eight years. During these eight years he was twice appointed Postmaster of the Oakland postoffice under President Woodrow Wilson's administration. He retired from this work in October, 1923, and returned to his newspaper profession with renewed zeal.

He was married to Susan Miller on October 10, 1900, who survives him. He is also survived by one son, Thornton Offutt Deffinbaugh, one sister, Mrs. Marion Deakins, of Morgantown, West Va., and one brother, Benjamin Deffinbaugh, of Baltimore.

Among his many civic activities, he was a member of the County Board of Education in 1908, a member of the Knights of Pythias lodge and the local Rotary Club.

En Route to Points in West Va. to Participate in Programs

Twenty-two members of the I. O. O. F. band, composed of boys and girls of the I. O. O. F. Home located at Elkins, West Va., passed through Oakland Tuesday morning en route to Piedmont and Keyser, W. Va., where they will render programs under the auspices of the local Odd Fellows lodges of each place. Mr. A. J. Wilkinson, of Huntington, W. Va., was in charge.

The holiday trip which the band is taking includes stops at Masontown, Piedmont, Keyser, Blaine, Terra Alta and Kingwood, West Va. The members of the band travel in a large passenger bus, which comfortably seats them all.

The proceeds of the concerts given by the band go toward the upkeep of the home at Elkins. During the tour last summer $8,000 was taken in over a period of ten weeks, according to the director of the organization. He was unable to estimate what the proceeds of the present trip would be.

Four members of the band, two boys and two girls, are attending West Virginia University. They are supported while there by funds owned by the Elkins I. O. O. F. Home.

THE TEACHING OF SPELLING—THE OLD WAY AND THE NEW.

Can Children in the Public Schools of the Country Spell as Well as They Could in the "Old Days?"

TEACHING SPELLING in 1900

TEACHING SPELLING IN 1926

THE OLD WAY.

Spell these words:

ea lum ni ate con cu pis eence e phem er an thy ux o ri ous sa lu bri ous ter ra que ous

Grandfather wrestled with these words in the old "blue-back" speller, written by Noah Webster in 1803, and used in many schools as the only elementary text-book for many years.

Have you ever used one of the following words in a letter or other writing?:

eleemosynary	chirography	reconnaissance
malachite	mnemonics	quassia

These words have been taken from a speller used in grammar grades as late as 1905. Children stood in a row and "spelled down" on "cold-storage lists" of words which they never heard spoken or saw in print outside their spelling books, in spite of the fact that in their letters and written work the daily misspelled such words and phrases as:

therefore	pleasant	may be doesn't	very	could
all right	about	half
buy	which	whether
than	cents	business

"Learning the dictionary" involved the memorizing of absurd definitions, such as:—

WINDOW, an orifice in an edifice.

HORSE, a quadruped.

One wonders how completely our great-grandfathers were "motivated" to study spelling after memorizing this definition, which appeared on page one of the Webster Speller:

"Language in its more limited sense is the expression of ideas by articulate sounds. In a more general sense, the word denotes all sounds by which animals express their feelings, in such a manner as to be understood by their own species."

THE NEW WAY.

How to make poor spellers into good spellers has been one of the knottiest problems educators have had to solve. Research has come to the rescue in the last few years. Today all are agreed that school work and daily living must not be divorced. The average person has little need of the 450,000 words and phrases in the English language.

Economy of time and effort demands that we teach those words most commonly used in the writing of children and adults. Such a list is in use in the modern speller. If the average person can spell and use correctly the 3000 most common words he will not often need to refer to the dictionary. We not only know which words are most necessary, but also which words are most often misspelled. Lists of words—demons for each grade and each individual stimulate effort. Such words as too their believe committee principal separate hold places of honor on many such lists.

High-lights of modern spelling:

1. Teach the words the child needs now or in the near future.
2. Discover which words are hardest for each child by giving a preliminary test. This makes him conscious of his difficulty and gets him interested in overcoming his handicap.
3. Let each child work only on the words he has missed.
4. Teach the child a method of studying words.
5. Frequent reviews using games and competition.
6. Teach him how to picture his progress by means of graphs.
7. Help him to measure his progress with all other children of his age and grade by means of standard tests.
8. WRITTEN PRACTICE in phrases and sentences.

Can Children Today Spell as Well as They Could in The "Old Days"?

Much has been said of the good spellers who won in the old spelling matches, but very little has been said about the ninety and nine who were "spelled down."

In 1906 some old examination papers which had been written in 1846 were found in the attic of an old school building in Springfield, Massachusetts. When the same words were pronounced to eighth grade children they did much better than their forefathers had done sixty years before in the same grades in the same school. This same old list has been pronounced to eighth grade children all over the country, always with the same result.

Children of this generation are better spellers than they were in 1864.

In Allegany county, Maryland, some of the parents boasted of how much better they could spell than their children. In the Maryland State Bulletin, "School Publicity," the assistant superintendent of schools tells how he brought the matter to proof:

"I had the children in one of our most progressive communities challenge their parents to spell against them. Fifteen parents and fifteen children stood up on opposite sides. I pronounced the words. The parents all went down with nine children still spelling. * * * Since that evening I have not heard anybody in the county brag about the spelling of adults."

BITTINGER

Remember the glad things, forgetting the sad things,
Though you have had things, you no longer do,
Learn that behind things, you always may find things,
Beautiful, kind things, some one is saying of you.

Christmas has come and gone with its cheery spirit of goodwill and the village has settled down to the even tenor of its prosaic way.

Sleet and ice covers hill and dale and the winter blasts keep the country folks close by the comfortable fireside, but there is a smile upon the cheery farmers face as he goes whistling about his tasks as the old year passes out and it is our wish that the dawning New Year may bring prosperity and happiness to The Republican and to all the good folks who read it.

We cannot tell of the capture of the bear, which was reported as having been seen in this section about a week ago. On the Monday morning when the Nimrods of the community had planned to take up the trail and capture the creature, there came a rain which melted the snow and obliterated the trail so that no one could follow the animal to his hiding place.

Mrs. T. B. Wiley, of Grantsville, spent Christmas Day and the early part of the week with relatives in Bittinger.

After a heavy sleet had formed on trees and telephone wires last Saturday night, a high wind arose and as a result many trees were broken and telephone service was destroped.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 2, 1926.

THE CHRISTIAN A FOLLOWER OF JESUS.

Mark 1:16-20; 2:13-17; I John 2:6.

He saith unto him, follow me. And he arose and followed him—Mark 2:14.

WHO CALLS?

There can be no following without some one to follow. There can be no call and no called men without a caller. That lies at the foundation of these three months of study in the Christian life, for it all harks back to the heart of it in the Lord who calls men to follow Him. He walked across the world as an historic figure. Questioned as that is by some there is abundant proof of the character that is depicted by the Gospels. An institution as stable as the Church needs more than a myth for its foundation. A day as much used as Sunday needs more than expediency to explain the change from the seventh day. If the four Gospels are fiction it is passing strange that no other bit of literature in all the world has dreamed of centering its story upon such a character, or has dared to depict another such as He. The only adequate explanation of so great an influence as has passed into the life of the world through Him is to accept the record and the Man of the record.

But He is more than a figure of history, high as He towers in such a capacity. He is a living fact to be reckoned with in the life of today. Other great men have been figures of history. Lincoln is known and loved about the earth. His name is familiar in the tongue of many nations. His shadow falls farther than that of any other man of America, but no shrines are built to him No child is taught to lisp his name in prayer. He is dead and only a figure of history whose work abides. But there are millions who declare that they have spiritual commerce with Jesus; that He has redeemed them from sin and its habits, that He works in them and through them wonderful character products in this year of our Lord, 1927. When Mel Trotter was being examined by the Presbytery for his ordination one question was, "How do you know you are converted?" As quick as a flash the response came back, "I was there." It is that consciousness of the living, present Lord that differentiates Him from all other characters that appear in the records of earth. And He it is that calls men to follow today in the same tone as yesterday that makes the Christian the called person.

WHO FOLLOW? HEARERS.

In that old day when Jesus walked beside the sea and visited in the homes of Galilee He made his friends as others do. He knew John the Baptiser as we would know him. He talked with Peter and James and John and Andrew as we would do. And then seeking to create a living cause and knowing that there was no way except by teaching a group the truth of it He began to gather those that He felt could be used for such a purpose. Not all whe were called followed. There was the rich young ruler who refused the invitation. There was the man who wished to go and bury his father, the one who wished to turn back for the protracted farewells of the oriental. There must have been many more who were bidden to come. But these heard the call. They had listening ears. The speech of the spirit caught their attention that was not dulled by the roar of the world. The swish of the net, the splash of fish, the rush of the boat died away into a stillness under the tones of Jesus. With Matthew there was the continuous clink of coin but it no longer dinned upon his senses when Jesus spoke his name. All who followed were listeners for the call of the highest. There was a spiritual expectancy in their being that waited for the coming of their Great Guest. And that is the perpetual characteristic; there are no followers who are not hearers first.

WHO FOLLOW? LEARNERS.

They were disciples and the disciple is a learner. It was after they had learned that they were called Christians at Antioch. Not one of them faced Jesus with the attitude of knowing it all. Even in their chosen profession in which field anywhere such a feeling may exist His direction was accepted. It was after a fruitless seeking through the dark that Jesus said, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught. We have toiled all night and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word, etc." was the pledge of obedience to orders from a carpenter and a landsman. Every man of them was open minded and willing to learn. And the followers of the Way keep that characteristic of teachableness or else they are not disciples. Judas was the only one whose rigidity of mind kept him from entering into the new ways of the Kingdom of Truth. And he has his posterity still though it is not among the eager youth who are hearing and learning today.

WHO FOLLOW? SERVERS.

These folk were not being taken along for a holiday trip. They were to be initiated into the skills of the way as well as into the truth of it. They watched Him at work among the outcasts, the racial and social derelicts of the day and amazed themselves by sitting at the feast among publicans, at dining with Zaccheus, with touching lepers, with handling dead bodies, with feeding the strangers, with associating with Samaritans, with preparing meals, and they listened to His word: "He that is greatest among you let become your servant." And in the midst of their bickering they saw Him gird His loins with a towel and wash their feet free from the clinging dust of the highway. And it is only the servers who are followers today, they who have mastered in some fashion the technique of Him who served even at the cost of the cross.

WHO FOLLOWS? LOVERS.

Behind all things else was the drive of a passionate devotion of heart for this Man who was different from every other they had ever known and whose attractiveness thrilled and thralled their hearts. It was such love that they were carried out of their old antagonisms, out of their old practices, out of their old locations in their desire to be with Him. One of them loved to lean upon the breast of this Master Who must be touched in an endaevor to tell without speech what lay in the heart of the followers. And it is this that marks the men and women of these later times who still hear and learn and serve and would die rather than give up their loved Lord. And as heroic followers exist as in the apostolic days, men and women who face scorn, and deprivation, and peril on every continent that they may "follow in His train."

ANYWHERE TO ANYWHERE BY TELEPHONE

There is a way to SAVE on your LONG DISTANCE CALLS

ISN'T this about the way you make most of your long distance calls?

When the operator answers you tell her "I want to speak to John Y. Evans, the Ajax Manufacturing Company, 234 Pearl Street, New York City." She must then connect you with Mr. Evans and no one else.

Here is a way you can do much of your long distance telephoning for less money and with greater speed. Mr. Evans is probably in his office when you make your call and if not, someone else can talk for him. Then why not tell the operator "I want anyone at the Ajax Manufacturing Company," or simply give her their telephone number if you know it. On a call of say 150 miles to a particular person, the charge is $1.20; the rate when we simply connect you to the out-of-town telephone is 95c.

The first way of calling is termed person-to-person service; the other and simpler way is station-to-station service. The latter makes less work for our operators with less use of our lines and we pass the savings along to you.

Think of this when you are making long distance calls, either business or social. Telephone users are turning more and more to station-to-station service as a speedier and cheaper way of doing their long distance telephoning. Over half the messages we now handle are on this basis.

QUIT GETTING UP NIGHTS

A Healthy Bladder Acts During the Day.

C. N. Shuman, Republic, Ohio, says: "Before taking Lithiated Buchu (Keller Formula) had to get up six or seven times each night. Now I do not get up at all. You may use my name if it would benefit anyone with bladder trouble." Be careful not to take drugs that check the action of the bladder. You may have to continue its use. Lithiated Buchu (Keller Formula) increases the action during the day. It cleanses the bladder as epsom salts do the bowels driving out foreign matter, neutralizing excess acids, thereby relieving the irritation which causes "Getting Up Nights." The tablets cost 2c each at all drug stores or Keller Laboratory, Mechanicsburg, Ohio.

THE PASSING OF A FRIEND.

In the death of Charles A. Deffinbaugh, editor of The Mountain Democrat, Oakland has sustained the loss of one who has ever held the welfare of the town and community uppermost in those things he deemed material and essential to the betterment of the whole people.

As one engaged in the making of a newspaper it was always his desire to be fair, honorable, clean and trustworthy. He was true to his principles in his dealings with all men and in all that he did. He was broad-minded in his relations with those who held opposite views politically, in spite of the fact that he was looked upon as being intensely partisan. In all the years he was engaged as publisher of The Democrat a friendly and fraternal spirit with those likewise engaged was ever existent.

The Republican keenly feels his passing. His was a kindly disposition. As boys we were friends and with the passing of the years this friendly spirit was not allowed to lag, but became all the stronger.

We have lost a fine, true-hearted, trustworthy kindly neighbor, and in his death we can truly say we have lost one whose friendship we valued and the remembrance of whose exceeding kindness and true fraternal love and consideration we shall ever cherish.

May his spirit rest in everlasting peace.

THE BOY OF TODAY.

Just at present there is a laudable disposition on the part of our public men to come to the defense of the boys of the present generation. At a recent address in Chicago, Cameron Beck, personnel director of the New York Stock Exchange, declared that the present generation of boys is the finest in all history. "They are exceptionally honest" he declared, and business men are trying to do everything they can to help boys." Mr. Beck was backed up in the same meeting by Judge Benjamin F. Jones, former president of the Lions International Organization, who declared that in spite of the dark picture of modern youth being painted by some judges, publicists and writers in general, he is of the opinion that the boys and girls now have a finer conception of life than ever before.

Another public man who has come to the defense of modern youth is Dr. Mather A. Abbott, headmaster of the Lawrenceville School for Boys who wrote recently in the New York Nation, that he finds a remarkable standard of truth telling and honor among the boys of his acquaintance. A boy's word, he declared, once given is rarely broken, and on the whole he is a clean minded individual.

The words of these men who have an intimate contact with modern youth, ought to be reassuring to come of our dark minded pessimists who have been telling us that the present generation is going to the dogs. It is true that there are some boys who turn bandits and others who drink synthetic liquor and make fools of themselves generally. But the number of these, does not compare even fractionally with that of the bright and active youngsters who are entering our business world today from the bottom, who are studying to become the mechanics, the electricians, the chemists, the doctors and the lawyers of the future. Interest in science and mechanics among boys is now greater than it has ever been.

Most of us feel sure that the world is on the eve of great scientific discoveries which will add to the peace, the happiness and the longevity of our people. We are confident that many of these discoveries will come within the next ten, twenty-five or fifty years. But these things can not come if the boys and girls of today are going to the dogs.

But they are not, and the great benefactors of mankind for the next generation are now in the schools, in the workshops, and in our great business establishments occupying minor places but with the real American spirit which will enable them to rise above their surroundings.

NO EDUCATION—SUCCESS?

An Eastern business executive, writin the January issue of Success Magazine, has denounced college graduates and has refused to employ them hereafter. He gave eight reasons why he had had his fill of college trained men and they may be summed up in a few words: Prejudices against the business world; lack of ability to think, to make reasoned and practical deductions; because of pleasure loving habits; their unwillingness to start work at a salary that they are worth and constant desire for raises in salary; because of the notion that they are better than the non-college workers, and because of their unwillingness to stick to the job, their laziness, irregular hours, desire for much time off and their casual attitude toward their work.

After reading these reasons over, it is the opinion of the writer that the eastern executive was somewhat hasty in his assertion. Does any man who has come in contact with only a small percentage of college graduates of the United States or the world, have a right to make a generalization that is supposed to apply to all college graduates?

Take the reasons that the executive gave for not employing college trained men. They can be applied just as easily to thousands of men who never even saw a college or university and they will probably outnumber the college attendants. It is readily admitted that many graduates of colleges are as he says, but the word does not include a majority by any means and it is unfair to the college men for him to generalize upon the inefficiency of a few.

What would the medical profession be without college trained men? How far would the world have advanced in scientific methods, knowledge of the universe, if it were not for the college trained men? What would the law profession be without college trained men? Any sort of engineering, modern agriculture, in fact any business, profession or research work.

This eastern executive did not think as he sat in his office writing the article against college graduates and trained men that if it had not been for them, the building in which his office was located probably would never have been erected, and that modern sky scrapers would be only imaginative.

He has said that no college graduate need apply to him for employment because he would get no consideration, and that he had had his fill of them. Good enough. College graduates probably have no desire to work under such an employer.

In the meantime, all the colleges and universities throughout the world will keep on graduating thousands and millions of men and women, and they will continue to find employment notwithstanding the fact there is a business executive who, having been made sour by contact with several "lemons" feels that all graduates of colleges are worthless.

The fact that there is crime in the world does not make everybody a criminal.

DIED.

HENRY BROADWATER.

Henry Broadwater, a prominent and highly esteemed citizen of New Germany, died last Saturday morning at the age of 87 years, 4 months and 12 days. He was a veteran of the Civil War, and when he decided to enlist in the service of his country he left his plow standing in the furrow, and for the next three years served his country faithfully and well in the cause of human freedom and against secession. Shortly before taps were sounded for the gallant old veteran, he requested that his body be buried with military honors at the hands of the American Legion.

Agreeable to his request, thirteen members of Earl H. Opel Post, of Salisbury, went to the late home of the deceased, Monday afternoon, with a firing squad, color bearer and H. H. Statler as bugler, and officiated at the burial. The exercises were very impressive, and many friends and relatives attended the obsequies to pay their last respects to one whom they held in high esteem not only as a soldier, hut also as a citizen, friend and neighbor.

He is survived by his wife, three sons and three daughters, as follows: Charles and James, at home; Salem, of Deer Park; Bertha, at home; Della, wife of Marshall Durst, of New Germany; Mrs. Anna Hayes, of Lonaconing.

The funeral service was held at the New Germany M. E. Church, the Rev. Mr. Johnson, pastor of the Grantsville and New Germany M. E. congregations officiated. The burial arrangements were in the hands of Wm. Winterberg, funeral director, of Grantsville. The interment was made in the M. E. Cemetery at New Germany. The pallbearers were A. C. Stanton, G. W. Diefenbach, George Hummel, Wilfred Warner, Owen Crowe and Urban Wiland.

FOREST FIRES IN STATE SET RECORD IN YEAR 1926

Incendiarism Laid To Effort To Increase Huckleberry Crop In Frederick County.

More forest fires, with greater damage and devastated area, were reported in Maryland in 1926 than in any year on record, according to F. W. Besley State Forester.

Since January 1, 1926, 518 fires, covering an area of 58,739 acres, have been reported. The loss, according to estimates of farest wardens, was $468,990.65. In 1925, a record year to that date, 34,061 acres were burned over and the loss was $162,748.30.

The extent of each fire has been increased from an average of seventy-eight acres in 1925 to an average of 111 acres in 1926. Since 1924 the number of fires has almost doubled, and the acreage burned over has increased more than 100 per cent.

Fires reported in 1926, Mr. Besley asserted, possibly were 75 per cent of the total number in Maryland for the year. The State Forestry Department is strengthening its organization gradually, but virtually it is impossible to get a report on every small fire that occurs, he declared.

Because of the drought in April, disastrous forest fires occurred in Anne Arundel, Prince George's and Charles counties, wiping out more than 5,000 acres of forest and causing extensive damage. Mr. Besley said. The damage in Prince George's county amounted to $195,723.50 while Anne Arundel county suffered a loss of $108,655.50. The fires in these two counties lasted for three days—April 21-23.

Eighty-One Fires In Allegany.

There were eighty-one fires in Allegany county. These burned over 14,128 acres and caused $52,730.50 loss. Last spring 505 fires burned over 58,580 acres and caused $468,368.65 loss. Favorable weather conditions limited the fires in the fall to thirteen, with loss of $622.

In Frederick county an outbreak of incendiarism was responsible for eighteen of the thirty-four fires reported in that county. These incendiary fires occurred five days last May. A reward of $1,500 was authorized by the county and the city of Frederick for the arrest and conviction of the offenders. According to John R. Curry, Assistant State Forester, an effort to produce a good crop of huckleberries for 1927 was responsible for the incendiarism.

Mr. Curry explained that huckleberries thrive in burned woodlands and that many persons in Frederick county practically depend on the huckleberry crop for a living. By setting fire to a forest a good crop of huckleberries is promised in the burned area a year hence, Mr. Curry asserted.

Caused By Burning Brush.

According to records of the Forestry Department, burning of brush was responsible for more forest fires than any other cause. One hundred and twenty-eight fires resulted from burning brush, fifty-three from railroads, sixty were incendiary, six were traced to logging industry, fifty-five to campers, smokers and hunters, twenty-five fires were started from miscellaneous causes and one hundred and sixty-six were of unknown origin. Sixteen false alarms were sounded, according to records.

With an annual appropriation of $3,000 to fight fires, approximately $9,500 was spent by the Forestry Department and counties in which the fires occurred. Each county pays half of the fire-fighting expense, it was explained. The expense of fire-fighting this year has caused the appropriation for the fiscal year of 1927 to be spent, Mr. Besley said.

In the budget of the Forestry Department for 1928 Mr. Besley asked for an emergency fund of $5,000 to fight fires whenever a severe outbreak threatens. Mr. Besley plans to divide the State into five districts in 1928, each district to be superintended by a forest warden. A new forest tower in Western Maryland is to be erected and telephone connections established with the eleven towers now in service. Educational work, designed to caution persons about forest fires, also will he carried on, Mr. Besley said.

HANSON B. LEWIS

Hanson B. Lewis, 65 years of age, restauranteur of 226 South Mechanic street, Cumberland, died suddenly at his home in that city early Friday morning while seated in a chair by a gas stove. Dr. William L. Burns attributed Mr. Lewis' death to an attack of the heart.

He leaves two sons, Andrew Lewis, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Edward Lewis, Akron, Ohio, and three daughters, Mrs. Dorothy Walker, Mrs. May Wolfe and Mrs. Winnie Saville.

Mr. Lewis had been a lumber buyer for various lumber companies in Cumberland and vicinity for many years prior to entering the restaurant business.

Activities of St. Mark's Church.

St. Mark's Lutheran church has enjoyed an unusual Christmas season.

The pastor, in simple, yet striking manner, held before his people throughout the season of Advent, the coming of the Master, which did much to make Christmas such an enjoyable season for his people.

The stately Christmas tree standing on the lawn in front of the church, illuminated with colored electric lights, was a new feature and attracted attention as well as much favorable comment. The current for the lights was furnished by the West Penn Power Company free of charge.

The annual children's Christmas service on Christmas eve was well rendered before a crowded house. The children, directed by Mrs. Lewis Bush, gave half an hour of recitations and exercises and sung Christmas songs. This was followed by a striking pageant, "The Old, Old Story," directed by Mrs. Ernest Townshend.

The early dawn service on Christmas morning at six o'clock was well attended. The church choir rendered a beautiful Christmas anthem and led in the singing of the carols. Pastor Shilke gave a short exhortation on "Those Who Greeted the Master." This was indeed a beautiful service.

Sunday school Sunday morning was well attended. The church service was also well attended. The pastor's sermon, "The Great Joy," was interesting. At the evening service he spoke of the Christmas carols and gave a brief review of the three most striking ones.

In connection with the morning service the following members of the council, who had been elected the preceding Sunday, were installed: J. C. Renninger, W. H. Hinebaugh and Henry Lauer. Officers of the Sunday school were also installed, as follows: Superintendent, G. J. Altstetter; assistant superintendent, Benj. H. Sincell; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Mabel Kahl; assistant, Kenneth Stahl; pianist, Miss Hazel Nine; assistant, Louise Lauer; librarians, George Altstetter and Elwood Hauser; superintendent primary department, Mrs. Lewis Bush; superintendent cradle roll, Miss Elizabeth Leary; superintendent home department, Mrs. J. M. Falkenstein.

Very liberal offerings marked the Christmas services.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK

The Christmas service conducted at the M. E. church showed the efficiency of Mrs. H. C. Leighton and Miss Mildred Welling, who trained the children in their parts. Everybody present were not only entertained but had several lessons bearing on the holiday season brought home to them.

Several of the young people were at their homes here for the holiday season, including Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Stephenson, of Rosewood, Ohio; Miss Margaret Leighton, of the Maryland University; Carlton Chance, Garthright May, Niles Falkenstein and Archie Oswald.

The heavy sleet of Christmas night caused several of the large trees in the Park to fall, one of which struck the garage at the Oswald home, doing some damage. Another fell on the Edwards property and smashed a section of the fence and carried down several telephone and electric wires. No other damage, so far as we can learn, resulted.

Mr. Thrasher, from near Clarksburg, West Va., was here visiting his daughter and family, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, who reside on North M. street.

Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Utterback and son Bobby were visiting relatives in Grafton recently. At that point Mr. Utterback installed one of his new radios for his grandmother and aunt.

Since the fall of rain, which has formed an icy coating, the young people are having a fine time coasting.

Mr. Loyal Riley, of the Gettysburg Theological Seminary, spent a few days this week visiting relatives and friends in this community.

GRANTSVILLE

One of the most successful affairs held at the Grantsville high school this year was the mothers and daughters banquet given Tuesday evening at 7:30 by Miss Marian Price, home economics teacher and the Senior and Junior classes. The banquet was the first known to be given in the state. The members of the faculty, mothers and patrons of the school feel proud to know Grantsville took the lead in this affair. The banquet was prepared by the girls in the home economics classes. It was beautifully served in courses by the members of the freshmen and sophomore classes, using the English service. The halls and agricultural room, where the banquet was served, were attractivcly decorated in Christmas greens, red and green crepe paper, also a tree prettily trimmed. The center table was decorated with a northern lake scene with snow and animals hovering around watching the star. Red candles were lighted and place cards of green and red adorned each table. Individual fruit cakes were given as favors. The Christmas spirit prevailed during the evening by singing of carols and music played by one of the girls dressed as the Christmas spirit. Miss Rachel Holmes and Miss Caroline Wallace played several beautiful duets during the evening and a number of speeches were made by the mothers and friends.

Miss Angela Getty acted as toast mistress for Miss Price and gave a very touching address on the fittness of the occasion, coming so near the Christmas season. The blessing was asked by Mrs. John Folk and the thank offering was given by Miss Christina Winterberg.

The mothers were so pleased over the success of the banquet and get-together meeting that they all agreed to make this an annual affair. They highly praised Miss Price for making the banquet possible, with the cooperation of the girls and others who so willingly assisted, by a rising vote of thanks to her.

Every one thoroughly enjoyed it as being one of the most successful entertainments given at the high school. This is Miss Price's first year of experience but her work and interest manifested has been very creditable.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Bair and child, enroute from their home, Philadelphia, Pa., in a Jewett sedan to spend Christmas with their parents at Bedford, Ind., met with an accident Tuesday evening about eight o'clock as they were descending Negro Mountain. Their car skidded on the slippery road and turned over four times landing upside down over an embankment fifteen feet below. The occupants within were badly shaken up and frightened but escaped injury, except slight cuts as one window was broken.

After calling for the Casselman Motor Co., and resting awhile, they continued their journey by train from Cumberland and left their car here for repairs till their return.

Owing to a breakdown exnerienced at the power house of the West Penn company at Meyersdale, Pa., Grantsville has been without electric service since Christmas eve. All stores, hotels and residences have been dependent on this source for lights and experienced much inconvenience as a result of the failure of the service. However, the old kerosene lamps have been brought out of the attics and are being supplemented by the brillint Christmas candles and the plain old-fashioned tallow dips. The lights, shining through windows of the various places where they are used have an eerie but pretty effect on the eye.

The storm of Christmas night did much damage to telegraph and telephone wires along the pike, linemen being kept busy repairing the damage when poles and wires came down.

Miss Esther Zehner, principal of the Engle school, had a Christmas program Tuesday afternoon, the parents and patrons of the school being invited. After the program, which was very interesting, refreshments were served, games were played and a treat was given each pupil by Miss Zehner. Christmas tree and decorations adorned the schoolroom. Place cards and favors were given.

The Five Hundred Club was delightfully entertained by Wm. Winterberg Monday evening. There were four tables in play. The guests not members of the club were: Harold Stanton, Samuel Winterberg and Otto Bender. The prizes were presented to J. R. Gnagey, high; A. J. Bender, second, and Charles O. Keller, consolation. A delicious two course luncheon was served by Miss Christina Winterberg and favors were given each one present.

LOCAL TROOP BOY SCOUTS MAKES A FINE SHOWING

Seven Attain Rank of Eagle Scout During Year; One Awarded C'tation for Bravery

The annual report to National Headquarters, Boy Scouts of America, has just been sent in by the loeal Seout officials. In order that the people of the community interested in the loeal troop may keep in touch with Seout progress, a summary of the report is appended:

On January 1, 1926, there were 22 boys registered as regular Scouts in Oakland. January 1, 1927, finds the number inereased to 37 regulars and three associate Scouts. An associate Scout is one who wishes to retain his troop connection but cannot become a regular because of enforced absence from regular Troop meetings—away at school, etc. The number of first class Scouts has increased from 15 to 21. Quite a large number have reached the rank of second class Scouts.

During 1926, the local Court of Honor issued 295 merit badges to the members of this troop. Seven boys have been awarded the much coveted rank of Eagle Scout—the highest rank any boy can get in any troop.

The troop turned out in a body to attend three religious services in as many local churches, assisted with traffic management on three occasions and extinguished one forest fire.

One Scout, Leonard Murphy, received a certificate for heroism from National Headquarters for saving the lives of two small children, at the risk of his own.

The troop spent two weeks in an offieial Scout camp on the shores of Deep Creek lake, at a cost of $275, most of which was furnished by the Ladies' Auxiliary and subscriptions from loeal organizations. The outstanding feature of the camp was the faet that every Scout in good standing could go whether he was able to contribute anything toward defraying the expenses or not. Quite a few boys were unable to swim when they entered camp but not one came home without having passed his first class swimming test—50 yards.

The last and best item on the report is the fact that only two registered Scouts have dropped from the troop roll, and both had good reasons for so doing. This is miles below the average pereentage, which is 43 per cent. Of course several boys have come declaring their intention of joining the troop, gave the list of tests the once over and changed their attitude, but only two who have decided to stick and be registered have quit.

I think all will agree that 1926 has been a most successful year in Scouting. The greatest contributing factor to its success is the co-operation of the community in general. As long as the public stands behind the movement and gives a push now and then it is bound to keep going forward.

On behalf of the troop, I wish to publicly thank the Ladies' Auxiliary, the Court of Honor, the troop committee, the fraternal and social organizations and every individual who has so generously assisted us during the past year, and to state that every Scout will do his best to merit its continuanee during 1927.

SCOTT W. SHIRER.
Seout Master.

Yutzy, H. A. Lotaditch, Wade H. Hinebaugh and Benj. H. Sineell, The flower bearers were also chosen from among the Rotary membership. Interment was made in the Oakland cemetery.

ROTARIANS ENTERTAIN AT DINNER FRIDAY NIGHT

Club Observed "Ladies' Night" at Which 37 Guests Were Present.

At a well appointed dinner served at the William-James Hotel last Friday night the Oakland Rotary Club entertained their wives and daughters to the number of thirty-seven, the affair having been designated "ladies' night" in deference to the fair sex.

Invitations were issued for the dinner for 6:15 o'elock, at whieh time the dining room of the hotel was opened and the guests surrounded the banquet tables.

Following the invoeation offered by Dr. Archibald Moore, several spirited Rotary songs were sung. The Rotarians and their guests then partook of an elaborate dinner, whieh included roast turkey and all the "fixings" going with the noble bird. During the repast several additional songs were sung and a solo by Mrs. Arnold Stanhagen, of Keyser, was also rendered and which was enthusiastically encored.

Dr. Henry W. McComas, president of the Rotary Club, made the address of welcome, while the principal address of the evening was delivered by Mr. Gerard Everstine, of Cumberland. Mr. Everstine took for his subject "The Spirit of Rotary," around which he built a masterful effort. Starting away back in history, before the time of civilization when man accepted not his brother or neighbor as friend but sought rather to slay them if they but eame within the bounds of his clannish domain, he traced civilization up to the present time when the principles of Rotary, which are the exemplified principles of brotherly love, are internationally accepted.

Miss Louise Lauer, of Oakland, very creditably played a piano solo. Mr. Franklin E. Rathbun, County Superintendent of Schools, presided as toastmaster.

Beautiful silver cake trays, with the Rotary emblem in the center, were presented to the ladies in attendanee.

The program committee for the occasion was composed of Henry Lauer, Guy O. Yutzy and Edward P. Kahl.

After the newly installed officers had been inducted, Mrs. Sara Naylor addressed the Chapter, and followed in a short speech by Mr. Rathbun. Mr. Harned presented the retiring Worthy Matron, Mrs. Elliott, with a Past Worthy Matron's jewel.

During the evening delieious refreshments were served.

Funeral of Mrs. Christena White

The funeral of the late Mrs. Christena Eleanor White was held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Fowler, with whom she had made her home for a number of years, last Thursday morning, December 30. A brief service was conducted by Rev. C. A. Shilke, pastor of St. Mark's Lutheran church of Oakland. Mrs. White was born April 30, 1857, near Red House, where she lived until after her marriage, when she moved to the vicinity of Texas where she lived until after the death of her husband. Her age was 89 years, 7 months and 28 days. Her husband was Joseph White, a veteran of the Civil War, whose death occurred 28 years ago. Mrs. White was a daughter of the late John Gauer and a sister of the late George Nicholas Gauer. One sister, Mrs. Martin Isabelle Burke, of Blissfield, Michigan; six nephews and seven neices survive her. She was a life long member of the Red House Lutheran church and was buried from St. Luke's Lutheran church at Texas where the funeral sermon was delivered and her body laid to rest beside that of her husband in the cemetery adjoining the church.

DEMOCRATS ARE SEEKING A MOSES TO LEAD PARTY

BY GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service
Staff Correspondent.

Washington, Jan. 3—The serach for a Democratie Moses to lead the party out of the wilderness of defeat that was visited upon it in 1920 and 1924 is being pursued quietly, but nevertheless with considerable avidity, these days in Washington. And thus far without much apparent suecess. The dying session of the Sixty-ninth Congress brought most of the active party leaders to the capital, and the discussions and conferences concerning 1928 have been frequent and prolonged. From time to time prominent Democrats outside of Washington have dropped in and participated.

The dinner given here a few nights ago which saw the launching of a boom for Governor A. Vic Dohaney of Ohio, was merely one example of the winter's schedule. There have been other quiet little affairs whieh did not attain so much publicity.

Even the most sanguine Democrat admits that the nearly three years that have passed since the Madison Square Garden holoeaust but little progress has been made in healing the wounds eansed there. And most of the party leaders admit that the next twelve months will have to see more progress made if the 1928 convention is not to see a repetition of 1924.

If the convention were held tomorrow it is certain that the candidacy of Gov. Al Smith would be presented just as militantly as it was at Madison Square Garden. And it would be just as militantly opposed. The strength of William G. McAdoo may not be as formidable as it was three years ago, but it is just as assertive.

In discussing the situation a few days ago a prominent Democrat pointed out that only one of the twenty-odd Democrats whose names figured in the 103 ballots at Madison Square Garden could be considered to be definitely eliminated were the convention to be held tomorrow. Samuel M. Ralston of Indiana, who at one stage of the fight could have had the nomination, has died. But all the others are still "available" and two names not voted on in the Garden have been added to the list:

The Complete List

Senator James A. Reed of Missouri.
Gov. Donahey of Ohio.

As for the rest of the list, here it is:

Al Smith of New York.
Oscar Underwood of Alabama.
Wm. G. McAdoo of California.
Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland.
David F. Houston of New York and Texas.
Gov. Jonathan Davis of Kansas.
Ex-Gov. James M. Cox of Ohio.
John W. Davis of West Virginia and New York.
Charles W. Bryan of Nebraska.
Senator Pat Harrison, Mississippi.
Senator Carter Glass of Virginia.
Senator Joe Robinson of Arkansas.
Senator Thomas J. Walsh of Montana.
Senator John W. Kendriek of Wyoming.
Gov. George Silver of New Jersey.
Senator Ferris of Michigan.
Huston Thompson of Colorado.
Gov. Sweet of Colorado.
Gov. Brown of New Hampshire.

Somewhere in that list may and probably will be the 1928 nominee, for it comprises all of the available timber now in sight.

Of course, it may he that in the next twelve months there will rise Phoenix-like some towering figure around which all the present discordant elements of the party can rally. But it is only rarely that Presidential nominees arise overnight; usually they are built up by a slow methodical process, and then are "born" at the psychological moment in a tired convention.

If a Messiah is coming for the Democrats in 1928, most of the leaders here have failed to see him yet, despite long and anxious watching of the horizon.

Odds on bets can be had in profusion that the 1928 standard-bearer will be in the above list.

Card of Thanks.

We take this method of thanking our friends for the many kindnesses shown us and our relatives during the illness of the late Mrs. Christena E. White.

RITCHIE HOPES ASSEMBLY WILL CUT STATE TAX RATE

Governor, In Message At Opening Session of Legislature, Figures on a 25-Cent Basis.

Annapolis, Jan. 5—Governor Ritchie told the General Assembly at the opening of its session today that he considered the two outstanding tasks of the session the provision for financing the State's business for the next two years by appropriation bills and the revitalizing of the seafood industry of the Chesapeake Bay.

If the appropriations are held down to the amounts to be recommended by him in his budget, the Governor said, the State tax rate for 1927 and 1928 will be 25 cents, a reduction of about 2½ cents from the present rate.

Urges Gas-Tax Increase.

The Governor recommends an increase of 1½ cents a gallon in the tax on gasoline for lateral roads and 1 cent for the elimniation of grade crossings. He urged that this Legislature be one of fewer laws and laws carefully considered.

Proceeding under suspension of the rules, the General Assembly extended the term of Associate Judge H. Arthur Stump, of the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City, until the general election of 1931. This was the first legislative act of the sesion and the only one today.

The Senate, in executive session, confirmed Governor Ritchie's selection of Judge Carroll T. Bond as chief judge of the Court of Appeals.

Certify Ritchie Winner.

Both houses, in joint session, canvassed the returns of the last election for Governor and decided Governor Ritchie was the winner. Then they passed a resolution urging him to appear at the State House on January 12 to be inaugurated.

The total vote of the State, as shown by the certificates from clerks of courts throughout the State, was: Ritchie, 207,437; Allison E. Mullikin, Republican, 148,145.

Both Houses adjourned to meet again next Tuesday at noon.

Both Houses organized by electing officers chosen at the Democratic eauses last night. In the Senate, Alexander R. Hagner, Republican nominee, moved to make unanimous the choice of David G. McIntosh, Jr., for president of the body after the vote had been taken. In the House of Delegates such a courtesy on the part of J Milton Patterson, Republican, caucus for Speaker, was impossible, for the vote was taken by ballot. E. Brooke Lee, Democratic caucus nominee, was elected by a vote of 80 to 35.

Speaker Lee Sworn In.

Frederick Lee Cobourn, of Harford county, was temporary speaker of the House. Speaker Lee was sworn in by Daniel Joseph, of the Fourth Legislative district, the oldest member in point of service. The members then were sworn in by groups.

When Frank Small, Jr., Republican, of Prince George's county, approached to take the oath, he was told to stand aside until all other members had been sworn in, as notice of a contest of his seat had been filed by Kent Robert Mullikin, Demoerat. Mr Mullikin, in his petition and notice, averred that the official returns showed 5,275 votes cast for him and 5,280 for Small. He disclaimed any allegation of fraud, but stated that the returns in favor of Small was caused by "unintentional and inaccuracies" on the part of the election officials in the First precinct of Seat Pleasant district. The case will go to the eommittee on elections, to be appointed.

Curtis Fails To Appear.

In place of the Democratie slate for desk officers Delegate Patterson, of Allegany, Republican floor leader, offered a substitute containing the names of the nominees of the Republican caucus. This was deferred by a straight party vote. On the adoption of the order appointing the Democratie list eighteen Republican members voted with the Democrats.

Francis P. Curtis, who was elected one of the delegates from the Second Legislative district, did not appear to be sworn in. Charles C. Wallace, City Solicitor, has given Mayor Jackson an opinion holding that if Mr. Curtis takes his seat in the House he will thus automatically vacate his position of Commissioner for Opening Streets, to which he was appointed by the Mayor.

Employes To Be Selected.

In addition to the officers selected today, about forty-five employes, such as doorkeepers, folders, proof readers, stenographers, postmasters and committee clerks, are yet to be appointed in the House and about the same number in the Senate. The House employes will be named by the Committee on Organization, appointed today by Speaker Lee. The committee consists of one member from each Democratic county and Legislative district.

The committee will meet at the Royal Arcanum Building in Baltimore at 1:30 o'clock next Monday. There will be an average of two places for every Democratic county, but in the distribution those counties whieh have received some of the better places will be given few or no appointments.

The House adjourned at 4:18 until noon next Tuesday.

There were many visitors at the session and when Governor Ritchie explained his message, the galleries were crowded. George W. Crabbe, State superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and Rev. W. W. Davis, executive secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, were on hand sizing up the members.

COMMISSIONER BROWNING REMAINS HEAD OF BOARD

Chosen As President of Body by Conferes Upon Organization Monday Morning.

Upon the organization of Garrett County's new Board of Commissioners effected Monday, Mr. George D. Browning, who was reelected a member of the board at the general election in November, was chosen by his associates as president of the body.

Mr. Browning is the only member of the body having had previous experience as a Commissioner. As such he has served nine years, seven of which he has been president of the body.

The other members of the Board, Messrs. Daniel E. Orendorf, of near Oakland, and Harvey Gortner, of Grantsville, are taking hold of and solving the many intricate problems being presented the body by people from every section of the county, whieh augurs well for a successful administration.

The Board has been kept busy during the week appointing road supervisors and hearing pleas of delegations from various sections who desire new roads built and other internal public improvements made.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 9, 1927.

THE STANDARD OF CHRISTIAN LIVING.

Luke 6:27-38. Read Matt. Chapters 5-7.

THE STANDARD LIFE.

If one goes to the Bureau of Standards in Washington he will find more marvelous contrivances than he ever dreamed. There shadows may be heard to fall, the weight of your signatue actually discovered, the distance your push will move a brick wall computed, the earth gives up its number of tons and all the weights and measures of the land have something here to determine their accuracy. When it comes to Christian living, we need just as much a standard of measurement as does the grocer or the manufacturer. It is found in Jesus Christ. What He was in the measure toward which we are expected to advance. There are two ways in which this may be apprehended. One is by the careful, unprejudiced study of the Gospels. Here are the attitudes expressed in His life that impressed those who saw Him. That response to the question of what people thought of Him: "Some say that thou art Elijah; some say John the Baptist, some Jeremiah, and some that one of the old prophets is risen from the dead," tells much more than many a page of description. The impression is full of virile strength, of positive convictions, of unfaltering courage. All that is a part of what the Christian is meant to be. His persistent attitude of good will profoundly marked all His living. There were no favored classes or favored races with Him. Nichodemus and the Samaritan woman, Pharisee and sinner, jostled one another. His life is the final word upon the life of the Christian. There is another way. In one of the old galleries of Italy there is a beautifully frescoed ceiling that was done by one of the masters, perhaps Raphael. One must strain one's neck to look up and see only a part of its beauty. In the center of the room, however, there stands a table with a mirror for a top and one can at leisure study the colors and design above him. In much the same fashion do we find Christ mirrored in the lives of His followers and looking there we get fresh light upon what our own should be. And we see this much more clearly than we do in the Word, though there is the unfortunate fact that we too often catch a caricature instead of an accurate presentation and grow confused in determining just what is the actual measure we need to apply to our own living.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE STANDARD.

Jesus came into a world where there had been utter failure. The Jew knew the law. He had studied the prophets and his learned scribes had told of the application to his own daily affairs in so minute a fashion that his knowledge had become a burden. He was hemmed in by rules instead of finding great laws that would become highways for the spirit. He had utterly failed to reach the standard that had been set up for his following. Now when one is attempting to jump a bar and has failed again and again to reach its level our policy is to lower the bar until it is within easy leaping distance and push it upward as skill increases. And Jesus would have had a glorious following if He had done the same thing. If He had said: "You have failed to come up to the level required through the endeavors of centuries, we will lower the standard until you can reach it." And that is the tendency today. Not prohibition, but give us light wine and beer, is one of the demands of the present hour. If you can't reach the level lower it until you can. In place of such a course, Jesus took the bar and shoved it higher than ever. Instead of accommodating Himself to men's wishes, he cried, "You shall be perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect." Men gasped, but the audacity of it has called forth men's highest efforts ever since and has resulted in all that is good in Christendom.

THE TERMS OF THE STANDARD.

Jesus insisted upon the love laws. No life unruled by love is a Christian life. For none other can be God-like. For the world relationships is the command to love one's neighbor as one's self. And the definition of neighbor is in terms not of national, social or racial types. And when that is applied there will be the end of war, for that is a child of hate, of falsified propaganda and nationalistic prejudice. Race antagonism will no longer wreck the world and a new day will dawn upon all the people. His community rule is that one we call golden, "As ye would men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise." Here is the solution of all our business and economic ills. Industrial war is impossible under such an attitude upon the part of both. Witness the Golden Rule Nash factory family that treats management, men and customers by that one regulation. For the group of Christian folk there is a still closer application in the word, "Love one another as I have loved you." That goes still deeper and is the one thing that will bury the ills of denominationalism in a passionate oneness that will unite all forms in a living family that will have a place for all and a service for each.

THE VITALITY OF THE STANDARD.

Can such a standard be realized by family folk? Can we rise to it? Can imperfection of act be covered by blessedness of intent? Well, there is was on hand, as the directing force. "He being dead, yet speaketh," and the present generation of leaders, in all parts of the State, to most of whom Gorman is now only a tradition, unknown to themselves are all guided by his pervading spirit which lives and works in all their plans and schemes. And it is safe to say that the modern American system of political organization and management owes its foundation to the late Maryland Senator. It is true the lack of honesty and sincerity in all partisan political affairs is not as open and brazen as it was in the Gorman days—the present manipulators have covered matters up with a hypocritical cloak of apparent rectitude and responsibility—but under all this camouflage may be discerned the old Gorman iniquities on which the late Senator Ingalls based his celebrated epigram of thirty-six years ago—"To expect purity in politics is an irridescent dream."

Forests Protected By Telephone

(1) The fire warden from his telephone in the forest can call for help in emergencies. (2) Hardwood timber that has reached maturity by protection from destructive fires. (Photograph courtesy U S. Forest Service.)

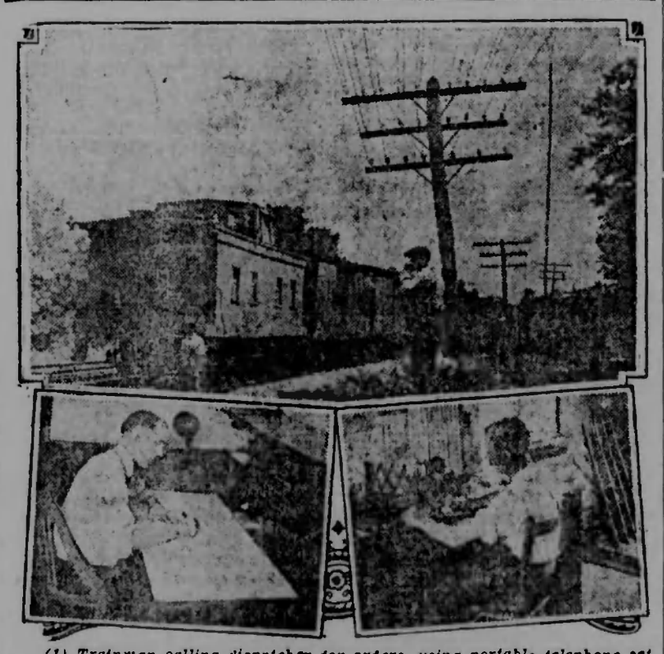
Telephones in the forests may seem out of place to the layman but if be should ask any forester, ranger or fire warden what his greatest aid is in fighting forest fires, he would very likely hear him specify the telephone.

The national and state forests in Virginia, and West Virginia, and the state forests in Maryland comprise about 27,000,000 acres of timber land. In this vast area there are 76 fire towers and lookout stations all of which bave telephono connection with central offices of the Bell System or their connecting companies or by forest fire service telephone lines to points of connection with long distance circuits. Several thousand miles of telephone lines can be utilized by the forestry departments of these states. The forest supervisors, rangers, and wardens of these forests are frank to say that the telephone is their main dependence in summoning help to meet the emergencies that arise when forest fires occur.

There are no national forests in Maryland but the state Forestry Department supervises the protection of about 2,000,000 acres of timber land and J. R. Curry, assistant state forester at Baltimore, in commenting on the value of telephone service in forest protection recently said:

"It is universally recognized by forest fire protective organizations that the time elapsing between the start of the fire and the reporting of the fire to the agency responsible for the suppression is a most important factor. in this phase of the work the telephone is indispensible. Every lookout tower must have a telephone. Without a telephone it would be useless. In all sections where there is telephone communication present every warden has a telephone. It would be difficult indeed to imagine any forest protective organization existing without this means of communication.

"The State Department of Forestry of Maryland receives. in all cases, excellent service through the central offices. Every telephone directory in the State carries a list of the forest wardens in that section which the book serves. Because of these services the State Department of Forestry is much interested in the development of telephone communication throughout the state."



The state forest fire service in West Virginia comes under the supervision of the Game and Fish Commission. The Forest Service Department follows closely the policies of the national forests and maintains lookout towers for protection. The whole area of 8,000,000 acres in the state, is tied in with a network of telephone lines that extend throughout the various ranger's districts. The districts being connected through by lines of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company. Phillip M. Browning, chief fire warden, from his headquarters at Buckhannon, supervises the fire protection forces and keeps in touch with the entire organization by telephone.

Mr. Browning says: "Our whole forest fire organization is tied in with the telephone company. Telephone service is absolutely essential to the maintenance of our protective organization which consists of rangers, wardens and observation towers located at strategic points throughout the forests."

The Monongahela National Forest in West Virginia covers an area of more than 160,000 acres, while Virginia has three national forests. the Shenandoah with 345,000 acres. the Natural Bridge with 140,000 acres and the Unaka in southwest Virginia. This latter forest is located in Virginia and Tennessee. About 45,000 acres is in the Old Dominion and 100,000 acree in Tennessee.

In addition to the national forests in Virginia, the state forest service manages 9,500,000 acres of the state's timberlands. Every forester in the national and state forests highly commends the value of telephone service in conserving the timber for future generations.

Telephones Used More by Railroads

(1) Trainman calling dispatcher for orders, using portable telephone set. (2) The dispatcher at the switchboard. (3) Towerman copying a telephone train order. (Photos courtesy Southern Railway Company.)

Greater use is now being made of the telephone in the operation of the railroads of this country than ever before and this has contributed substantially to the efficiency with which the rail carriers are being operated, according to a report just submitted to the annual convention of the Telephono & Telegraph Section of the American Railway Association at Swampscott, Mass.

Class I railroads in 1925 had 132,850 miles of telephone lines, used for the transmission of train orders, an increase of more than 13 000 miles compared with 1920. Telegraph lines used for such purposes in 1925 totaled 121,521 miles, a decrease of more than 13,000 miles compared with 1920.

In using the telephone instead of the telegraph for train dispatching, the information is handled in less time, less training is required to handle the telephone efficiently, there is less physical and mental strain on the dispatchers in making the calls, and operators who have become incapacitated as good telegraph operators are still able to handle the business by telephone efficiently. In the event of emergencies in train operation, the train conductor or engineman, using a way station or portable telephone, can give first hand information to the dispatcher, or superintendent more intelligently, with less excitement and in less time than with the telegraph. There is more of a personal feeling and better esprit de corps developed between the dispatchers, the different operators and the train crews than is possible with the telegraph, with obvious results.

IF

(With apologies to Kipling)

If you can watch your board when all about you
The rows of shining signals wax and wane;
If you can challenge in on all your flashes,
And on the lingering one-lights do the same.
If you can overlap, and keep from lapping
Into the adjacent operator's way,
And work on speed, and yet be safe from errors,
And see that observations are O. K.
If you can do all this, and not go boasting,
But do it in a just and generous way,
The road of progress has been opened to you,
You'll be a "Central Chief," my girl, some day.

—VIRGINIA MULLAN,
Baltimore Telephone Operator.

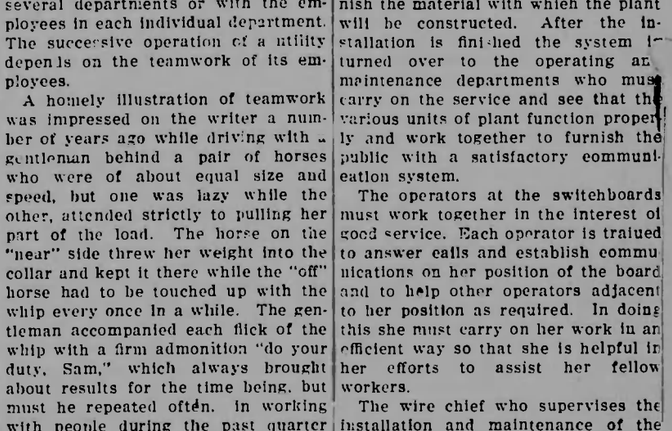
Teamwork is the keyuote of success. Every business, industry or individual that has ever amounted to anything had to have co-ordination and teamwork to bring about the results obtained. On investigation you will find that the success of any industry is dependent on the teamwork of the several departments or with the employees in each individual department. The successive operation of a utility depends on the teamwork of its employees.

A homely illustration of teamwork was impressed on the writer a number of years ago while driving with a gentleman behind a pair of horses who were of about equal size and speed, but one was lazy while the other, attended strictly to pulling her part of the load. The horse on the "near" side threw her weight into the collar and kept it there while the "off" horse had to be touched up with the whip every once in a while. The gentleman accompanied each flick of the whip with a firm admonition "do your duty, Sam," which always brought about results for the time being, but must he repeated often. in working with people during the past quarter of a century the writer has often been struck with the similarity of workmen to that team.

As an example visualize the operations of the telephone system, which has made a neighborhood of the nation. There could be no telephone service without the switchboards and associate equipment, the poles, wires, cables, conduit lines and other plant over which the conversations are carried between subscribers in the same locality, or from one community to another in the same state or even to a distant state or country.

Before a telephone office is established the engineers must go over the ground carefully and make a survey of the conditions to see whether a central office is needed. Among the things to be considered are the number of people in that particular community who may be expected to require telephone service at the present time or within the near future. Another factor which is given serious consideration is the number of people who may locate in this community within five, ten, fifteen, or twenty years and the class of business which they will operate.

With these facts in hand the engineers figure from past performances in other sections what may be expected in the way of telephone growth and what revenue may be expected from the service which will be furnished.



After this is done other engineers must figure the construction costs of building the necessary plant including switchboards, frames, batteries, poles, cross-arms, wire, and cable, and the maintenance and operation of the system. When this is completed and the officials pass on the estimate the work is authorized. Then the supply department must be called on to furnish the material with which the plant will be constructed. After the installation is finished the system is turned over to the operating and maintenance departments who must carry on the service and see that the various units of plant function properly and work together to furnish the public with a satisfactory communication system.

The operators at the switchboards must work together in the interest of good service. Each operator is trained to answer calls and establish communications on her position of the board and to help other operators adjacent to her position as required. In doing this she must carry on her work in an efficient way so that she is helpful in her efforts to assist her fellow workers.

The wire chief who supervises the installation and maintenance of the telephones and plant must have the co-operation of his installers and repairmen; in order to co-operate successfully with the manager and chief operator each of whom is responsible for a particular branch of telephone service.

Every phase of the business all the way from the president of the company down to the last office boy calls for teamwork.

Cows Heart Pumps 21,600 Gallons of Blood Every Day

MORE than 21,000 gallons of blood—enough to fill a tank 14 feet squnre and 14 feet high—are pumped through the nverage cow's heart in twenty-four hours, according to the Lnrrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Twenty to forty seconds are required for the blood to make a complete circuit of the main circulatory system.

The railroad engine deriving its power from the coal burned in its furnace, transforms the fuel into mechanical energy, but the dairy cow not only derives all her power from the grain, hay and grass she consumes, but, further, turns these materials into blood and milk, which is made of blood. A cow does not perform miracles, and her "milk factory" will not produce abundantly unless she herself is fed plentifully on a tested grain ration, good hay and silage. This is the only sure and safe method as yet discovered by scientists to keep the milk pail filled month after month.

Buy across the Counter

WHEN you buy across the counter in the stores of this town, you are using good business judgment. Why? There are many reasons, but one of the most important is this:

You can buy what you want at the price you wish to pay! You are not obliged to accept "something just as good," because you are in a position to compare values and make your own selections.

When you trade at home you are helping your friends to help you! And there is no finer thing in life than neighborly co-operation. It always pays—in happiness and satisfaction as well as dollars and cents.

THE PRIMARY AGAIN.

The primary has taken away our former high quality of statesmanship. Men well qualified for office are no longer willing to endure the gruelling experience of a primary campaign. The attractions of public office are not that attractive.

It has resulted in the unnecessary snatching away of the people's money. The cost of any primary campaign is enormous; and somebody eventually—the general public—must pay the price. But when any man temporarily has paid that price, he lacks the public's confidence.

In the absence of such confidence, where is the confidence which the people once cherished for American institutions? And, in the absence of confidence in the institutions of government, is it surprising that the electorate has lost its former interest in politics? Is it surprising that, all over the country, millions are staying away from the polls?

The will of the majority has been swallowed up in the efforts of blocs and groups and coteries with selfish axes to grind who through well-organized campaigns succeed in destroying the very tissues of representative government. Faith in public servants cannot be sound when it is generally realized that any man, backed by sufficient funds supplied by some selfish group or interest, can literally buy a nomination. And with that there is inevitable a disappearance of faith and eventually good and wholesome government.

THE NATION RETAINS ITS FAITH.

The close of the year brought encouraging reports about the expansion of the country's trade and commerce, about the growth of business and the assurance of continued prosperity. But the progress of America has not related simply to material things. For along with the other reports comes evidence of the country's concern with religion, together with an account of a steady growth in the membership of the church.

It has been widely believed that the American people have departed to a dangerous degree from the "faith of the forefathers"; but that such has not been the case a religious leader undertakes to show.

In declaring that a majority of the American people retain the religious position if not the identical form of belief of the founders of the country, the Rev. Charles Stelzle, chairman of the church advertising department of the International Advertising Association, holds that "even on a statistical basis, religion is seen to be making steady progress." Aside from the evidence furnished by the recent questionairre survey, which the advertising department of the church sponsored, these figures are cited: In 1800, the earliest date at which statistics are available, membership of Protestant churches of the country was only 7 per cent of the population. A century later it had increased to 24 per cent and now is 26 per cent. In the Catholic church and among other religious bodies there has been a similar gain, so that today the total church membership is 43 per cent of the population. With certain legitimate additions, including children not entitled, on account of age, to membership in some churches, Mr. Stelzle thinks the percentage of church members might be increased to 51 per cent, or more than one-half the country's population.

So much for figures, which may be given such importance as the individual is inclined to attach to them. But the recent survey itself, while not conclusive because it did not bring out the views of any considerable numbers, was in general reassuring. Mr. Stelzle relates that, while the survey was being planned, some of the persons interested in it were fearful it might afford an opportunity for large numbers of the people to express an enmity to religion and to attack the church. But there was no such result. And, whatever the actual explanation of it, the failure of the anticipated attack is significant.

It seems reasonable to conclude that the church and religion are as solidly entrenched in America as the replies to the recently broadcasted questions indicate. The form of religious belief may, and does, change as conditions change and added light is thrown upon all fields of human knowledge. The important thing is that the essentials of religion be retained and turned increasingly to constructive account. And that, it is fair to assume, is the case with America today.

THE HOME YEAR.

The year 1926 was prosperous and quiet. There was work for all, with good wages, good crops, good markets, good living, a surplus for pleasure and for investment. It was an extraordinary year for building and enjoying homes.

Sometimes one forgets the greatest blessings, in the glamour of a great emotion, the fear of a great evil, the toil of a great emergency; just as in the rush of business one may temporarily forget the home.

But home love outlasts the furious passion, bitter hate, fear and toil; it is still a benediction when other things bring only remorse and the memory of dead hopes, lost opportunities.

Just so, the quiet home year of 1926 will outlast the storm of war and of reconstruction hate that mars the trying period so lately past. It has gone into history, and into the national consciousness as a great Home Year.

GORMAN SYSTEM EVIDENT TODAY AS IN PAST YEARS

Maryland's General Assembly Has Been Governed By Expediency Since The Civil War

By Paul Winchester, Editor of The Marylander

Next week the centre of political interest will be at the State House, in Annapolis, and the probabilities are that the session of the General Assembly will be filled with more or less excitement from the very start—not because there are now in sight many great matters of public concern to be considered by the members of the two houses—most of the questions which seem likely to come up for determination, are of no really great moment, if the leaders have their way and are able to confine legislature to routine affairs affecting the State Government. For it is understood, that the Governor and his advisers will do all in their power to prevent the introduction of anything which may tend to interfere with the present apparent harmonious condition which exists in the democratic party. To what extent they will succeed is at present problematical—to all outward appearances they have whip-hand of the situation, and, under ordinary circumstances, should be able to retain a rigid control from the opening to the close of the entire session. If they show the wisdom in dealing with the members which they should possess, they will have little trouble in carrying out their program. That is, always provided, they find the majority they have as a basis for action is made up of men who desire above all else to be "regular," and who are ready to submit, to what is presumed to be the superior knowledge and ability of those at the head of party affairs, whether their views are in agreement or otherwise. Indeed there should be no cause for party disagreement. The matter to be considered are practically all purely business in their character, and, whatever friction may be caused will probably be of such a kind that it can easily be adjusted by compromise, and thus prevent sores, which now seem to have been releggated to the background as a result of the overwhelming vote of confidence in the State Executive and the other leaders polled at the last election. If a large majority means popular approval, and popular approval means anything, the people at the election last November decidedly approved the administration of the present Governor, from its very inception seven years ago—the approval also extends to all those leaders who were associated with him, not only in his administration, but also in the conduct of his campaign for reelection—and what is of more importance where the General Assembly is concerned, it virtually binds the whole democratic membership to back up the Governor in the completion of his program of legislation—a program which was fully outlined and understood, and on which, as a campaign basis, all, from the Governor, the State and other officials, and especially the members of the law making body, were entrusted with the administration of the several branches of the State government for the ensuing four years. There is no getting away from this conclusion. Governor Ritchie, his record and his policies, were well known. They were the issues on which the election was won. Every candidate of the Democratic party who was elected, won as a supporter of the head of the ticket and those policies—all, not only backed them up, but openly supported them—and, from a political standpoint, all are bound to support them, officially and otherwise, for the next four years. There can be no misunderstanding on this subject, the whole campaign, from the time the Governor was considered a candidate for a third term, when he made his formal announcement, during the months that ensued, when the State Convention met, when the platform was framed and adopted, when the City and county tickets were chosen, it was clearly and emphatically stated in the City and in all the counties, not only in the speeches made by the candidates and others, but in the party newspapers, that the whole campaign was based on an endorsement and thorough approvel of the Governor, not only as to what he had done, but what he proposed to do.

And yet, notwithstanding all the above well-known facts, it would be futile to attempt to predict with certainty what the General Assembly may do when in session for the next three months. That old time-dishonored maxim of the late Senator Gorman, "Platforms are made to get in on, not to stand on," has so permeated the politics and politicians of both parties in the Sate, as well as in the country at large, that there is never and assurance that issues on which candidates may be chosen, will be considered when the times comes for definite action. An attendance and close observation of the work of every session of the General Assembly for more than forty years has demonstrated that practically every action taken there, no matter what party may have a majority, is governed by expediency, and that expediency is the only rule that is ever followed, and that while the wisest, shrewdest and most unscrupulous of all Maryland leaders has been dead for twenty years, his spirit as exemplified in his maxims, still governs the methods and actions of his successors in both parties, and that Gorman dead is today as powerful as was Gorman living, when he dominated and at times held sway over the State with an iron hand. For a generation Gorman so impressed his strong personality on both parties in Maryland, so ploughed into the minds of all those engaged in politics, his machiavellian maxims and rules, that they are still followed, and that with few variations, as they were when the Senator was on hand, as the directing force. "He being dead, yet speaketh," and the present generation of leaders, in all parts of the State, to most of whom Gorman is now only a tradition, unknown to themselves are all guided by his pervading spirit which lives and works in all their plans and schemes. And it is safe to say that the modern American system of political organization and management owes its foundation to the late Maryland Senator. It is true the lack of honesty and sincerity in all partisan political affairs is not as open and brazen as it was in the Gorman days—the present manipulators have covered matters up with a hypocritical cloak of apparent rectitude and responsibility—but under all this camouflage may be discerned the old Gorman iniquities on which the late Senator Ingalls based his celebrated epigram of thirty-six years ago—"To expect purity in politics is an irridescent dream."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK

The holiday season, which has been so pleasant and agreeable, has passed, and our schools have resumed their work; merchants are making inventories of their stocks and old winter has put in its appearance in earnest. Monday morning there was eight inches of snow that had fallen during the previous night. Rain, which fell Monday night, will prevent the snow from drifting, and now another snow is falling which will likely make good sledding over the rough roads in this community.

Communion services were held in the M. E. church here last Sunday morning and a preaching service was held at night.

The evangelistic meetings begun on New Year's eve in the United Brethren church at Loch Lynn Heights, They will likely continue for ten days or two weeks.

Mr. Moomaw, with his big team and snow plow has opened the walks in various parts of the Park, so we are not entirely shut in by the heavy fall of snow.

So far there has not been ice sufficiently thick on the lake to economically cut and store in the community ice house. During the early years of the Park a near failure of the harvest occurred at which time it was only four inches thick. Since then ice of good quality and of good thickness has always been available at some time during the winter months.

Time Lost in Effort to Capture Happiness

For many years now I have been watching the pursuit of happiness. What a beating of bushes! What a scurrying hither I have seen! It would appear that most people regard happiness as a kind of wild rabbit which they must hunt and capture. They pursue it with horses and hounds and ships and high-powered motor cars. They stop at no expense. Yet I have not known a pursuer to capture happiness. They return to their homes disappointed. Often they have found the Angel of Happiness, after searching the world for her, waiting for them on their own door steps and she has welcomed them and for a day or two they have been filled with the light of her countenance.

"At last," they say, "we have captured her."

Then, suddenly, she is gone.

"What we need is more money and a bigger house," some of them have said.

And this has been a too common plea: "If I had another husband or another wife—some one who really loved me and my great purpose—then I should be able to find happiness and I am sure that she would stay with me."

All these incidents of the chase I have witnessed and the tragic failures which have followed them. I have come to think that no one who pursues Happiness can ever hope to catch her. And here I am in accord with good authority. Mr. Herbert Spencer has said that life consists in being in correspondence with environment. What then is happiness but a full correspondence with a good environment? How may one achieve it if his environment is forever changing? — From "Opinions of a Cheerful Yankee," by Irving Bacheller.

Lure of City Holds Even Poorest People

The hopelessness of efforts to induce people to move from the crowded cities to the serenity and beauty of the country, according to the Lincoln Journal, was brought home to a Londoner who was asked for a copper by a hobbling old man. When he asked why he did not live in the country, where his old age pension of ten shillings a week would go much further than in the city, the old fellow was ready with his reason. "I should be miserable there," he said, "without the refinements of London life." When pressed for particulars he said that these were the music in the parks and the benefit of the public libraries. He was very fond of the British museum. George Bernard Shaw was his favorite author. And there you are. It reminded the hearer of the old people in a Shoreditch almshouse who didn't want to be sent to the country. They liked London and didn't want to be kept awake by the nightingales. One of them liked best of all sounds the clip, clop, clip, clop and the jingle bells on the hansom cabs. What is the humanitarian to do with people who are as human as that?

Faded Superstitions

Whether she was really superstitious or not, the bride of fifty years ago was sure to observe certain little details that were passed along from one to another. For instance, no bride dared to ignore the old "something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue." Today they pay no attention to that or any other similar notions. "There was a time," says a venerable clergyman who has officiated at more marriages than he can remember, "when brides were superstitious, but I find none of it now. Brides coming to the church to be married when repairs are going on in the building walk under ladders with a laugh. But forty years ago, however, I waited at the altar in vain on one occasion, the bride refusing to go on with the ceremony because a black cat had crossed her path as she entered the church door."

Decorative Shoes

Most shoes of the Middle ages had soft uppers, sometimes closed to the ankle or higher, but frequently open down the front and laced over with decorative straps. Stocking boots, woolen gaiter shoes and simple leather soles sewed to the end of tights were also worn. Tops of high shoes and boots were often folded over or trimmed with fur. During the Thirteenth century pointed toes of shoes increased in length, when the points were sometimes turned up and back and tied to a garter just below the knee. High wooden clogs were worn to increase the height. In the last quarter of the Fifteenth century pointed toes began to be succeeded by round ones that later became broad and almost square.

"Go to Jericho!"

When he wished to be free from disturbance Henry VIII used to go to a house in the manor of Blackmore, about seven miles from Chelmsford.

As a disguise, this place was given the name of Jericho, and when anyone inquired for the king while he was seeking peace it was customary to say that he had "gone to Jericho." The place usually goes by the name of the "Jericho estate" or the "Blackmore priory," and a brooklet running through the village is called "the Jordan."

The popular saying may have been originally a rebuke to young upstarts: a verse in the second book of Samuel [illegible] your [illegible] —Bits.

Old Chinese Money Had Shape of Toys

It is pretty definitely settled that the Chinese were the first to make use of the token idea in metal coins for the convenient interchange of commodities. When first working with metal money they tried to shape the metal to indicate what one could buy with it. For example, some of the early coin money was shaped like a human body. It was given this shape to indicate that it would buy clothing. Another shape was that of a modern razor—not a safety—which indicated that the coin would buy a weapon. A third shape was that of a spade.

The Chinese did not have coin shapes of sufficient variety to indicate everything in which they traded. They had a few shapes only, and the theory is that these would cover all the different articles one might wish to buy. For example, the body-shaped money would cover everything pertaining to clothing and shelter; the razor-shaped would cover all weapons, implements and tools which men use, and so on. The brass "cash" (round coin with a square hole in the middle), which has been used for 4,000 years or more, is still the common money in the interior of China.

Condition of Nerves Cause of Stammering

Almost every movement of our body is due to the involuntary obedience of our muscles to the directing will of the brain. This generally happens with our talking. We will to make certain sounds, and the proper muscles automatically force the wind from the bellows of our lungs here and there, against the roof of the mouth, through the teeth, and so on.

It sometimes, however, happens that the nervous connection between the brain and the various sets of sound-making muscles is weak or has been damaged by some shock.

Then the brain must either give its orders very slowly, something like playing an organ with one finger, or if it goes faster must risk playing the wrong notes or getting the whole machine so tied up as to make gaps between the movements. In other words, the sufferer stammers and stutters more so when he is excited and tries to "play" quickly. Nor will he be cured till his nervous system is strengthened and he has educated his speech-muscles to obey him without question.

Springtime on Mars

It seems almost useless to speculate upon the conditions existing on the planet Mars when we realize that under the most favorable circumstances the best views and photographs show the planet smaller than the butt end of a lead pencil. So that the "markings" seen on the planet cannot be very pronounced nor the changes of color which take place from time to time. However, the opinion grows that the dark patches which appear on the red disk when springtime comes to Mars and the polar snows melt, can now be declared much more certainly than before to be plants or shrubs or moss, or, at any rate, something green that grows.

When the polar snows melt on Mars, the water flows into the dry places and the deserts become alive with vegetation. All this happens very quickly and we may reasonably speculate great marshes are formed.

Izaak Walton's Wife

The recent sale in London of the dower chest of Anne Ken aroused considerable interest among curio hunters. Anne Ken, who was half-sister to the famous Bishop Ken, was Izaak Walton's second wife, and he refers to her in "The Compleat Angler"—"Hear, hear my Kenna sing a song," while her epitaph, written by Walton himself, is in Worcester cathedral. It reads as follows: "Here lyeth buryed soe much as could dye of Anne the wife of Izaak Walton, who was a woman of remarkable prudence, and of the Primitive Piety; her great and general knowledge being adorn'd with such true Humility, and blest with soe much Christian meeknesse as made her worthy of a more memorable monument. She dyed (Alas that she is dead!) the 17th April, 1662, aged 52. Study to be like her."

The Hidden Gift

I know all about that wonderful, perfected voice. I knew a man once who pursued it until he was within six months of conquering the world with it. He used to practice in Broadwood's piano stores in Pulteney street, secretly and at night. He had not been satisfied with opera engagements—with Sarastro and Marcel and applause. On the very brink of the realization of his dream the Truth stepped in with scythe and hourglass; and lo! an old man lying dead in University College hospital, and an elegantly dressed young Parisian in tears and perplexity saying: "I am his son—if only I had known!"—Viola Tree's "Castles in the Air."

Blankets From Trees

The paper-bark trees of northern Australia provide natural mattresses and blankets for benighted wanderers, according to the Sydney Bulletin. The bark consist of several layers, which combined are about an inch thick. The bark is stripped with the tree and split, part of it serving as a mattress and the remainder as a blanket, both of which are waterproof. Being very oily this bark also burns when other barks and woods are water soaked.

Trace Link Between Wickedness and Age

Hygiene and eugenics will combine to extend the natural term of human life in the opinion of Professor Huxley. The birth rate will continue to fall. As a result the not distant future will be confronted with a notable change in the relative number of young and old people. The elders will bulk larger in the statistics than they do today.

However gratifying the prolongation of life may be from the standpoint of the individual, the social effects threaten to be deplorable. Considering to what a pretty pass the world has already been brought by the wicked old men and the old men of the tribe, we can only shrink from a future in which the old men will be more numerous and, by definition, wickeder than ever. A world as foreseen by Julian Huxley and behaving as described by his brother, Aldous Huxley, would be a rather terrible world.

One can only cast about for a cure. Euthanasia as a corrective to eugenics is too heroic a remedy, aside from the fact that the old men, being more than ever in control of the parliament and the legislatures, will refuse to pass laws for the peaceful extirpation of hale but obnoxious old men. Probably the easier answer is to promote facilities for keeping old men young. They seem to be willing enough. More than ever the problems of leisure looms up. How is one to keep out of mischief a man who works five days a week and six hours a day and refuses to die before he is ninety?—New York Times.

Sundials Told Mayans of Passage of Time

Recent discoveries in the ruined Maya city of Copan have proved that the Mayas' method of counting the passage of time was of a highly accurate nature. The inhabitants of the city had in reality a form of gigantic sundial for obtaining the necessary data by taking observations from an eastern hilltop to a pillar of stone or stela erected on a prominent western hill approximately four and a half miles away across the valley in which lay the city. Clear evidence has been found that a correction was made at some date after the western stela had been set up, by the fact that the column was moved from its original position in the center of the stone base to another position farther north. The correction was made when the movable New Year's day fell on the same date as the commencement of the Maya agricultural year. In the first place the sun set directly behind the western stela on April 9 and September 2, but after the removal the dates were altered to April 5 and September 6.—Illustrated London News.

Trained Elephants

When Gen. "Chinese" Gordon took an Indian elephant and mahout to Africa for the purpose of training the African elephants he was only repeating history, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger. For antiquarians believe that the African elephants which were used by Hannibal in his crossing of the Alps were inferior to the Indian ones and that they were for the most part controlled and guided by Indian mahouts. Polybius is quoted as saying that at the battle of Raphia, Antiochus had Indian and Ptolemy African elephants. These animals, depicted on Carthaginian coins, are clearly of the African type, as shown by their large ears. The indications are that the art of elephant training in those early days originated in India and was brought from there to Africa.

Lottery's Golden Days

In the naughty Eighteenth century, before the British people became so virtuous, the lottery was a public event almost more palpitating than the lord mayor's show. "Today," writes Swift to Stella in 1710, "Mr. Addison, Colonel Freind and I went to see the million lottery drawn at Guild hall. The jackanapes of bluecoat boys gave themselves such airs in pulling out the tickets and show'd white hands open to the company, to let us see there was no cheat." In 1711 a son of Lord Abercorn won £4,400 in the lottery. Today it flourishes most magnificently in Spain, but in England, also, in a modest way, at church bazaars; for lotteries are not wicked at bazaars."

Great Writer's Dark Days

Not many know that the author of "Little Women," when a young woman, went out to do housework from sheer poverty. It was in 1853, when she was in her twenty-first year, that she wrote in her journal:

"In May, when school was closed, I went to L. as a second girl. I needed the change, could do the wash, and was glad to earn my $2 a week. Home in October with $32 for my wages."

The family certainly needed the $32. It was about this time that Bronson Alcott went west to make his fortune lecturing or something and came back with exactly $1.—Boston Transcript.

Expensive Suit

The first bit of gold discovered in Australia was found by a native bushman. It was a very large lump and he had an idea that it was worth something but he did not realize its full value. Seeing his employer counting some gold pieces he said he would bring him a lump of the yellow metal in exchange for a suit of corduroy. The exchange was quickly effected and the native brought a lump weighing more than two pounds and valued at more than $25,000.

Great Russian Had Hair-Trigger Temper

Turgenev found himself involved in futile arguments with his young friend, which only ended in sullen tiffs. Thus we hear Tolstoy shouting with a flash of his maddening steel-gray eyes "I stand in the doorway with a dagger and a saber and I say, 'As long as I live, no one shall enter here.' That I call conviction. And you—you're trying to hide your real thoughts from each other and you call that conviction."

Turgenev, in the thin falsetto of rage, gasps irrelevently: "Why do you come here? This isn't where you belong. Go to Princess So-and-So."

"I don't have to ask you where to go, do I? Anyway, idle talk won't turn into conviction because of my coming."

"Darling Tolstoy," says a friendly witness, trying to make peace, "do calm yourself. You know how he esteems and loves you."

But Tolstoy, with dilating nostrils, only growls:

"I won't stand for it! He does it to tease me. It's on purpose that he's pacing up and down and wagging his democratic haunches."—From Yarinolusky's "Turgenev."

Might Have Changed History of America

The first congress of the American colonies was convened in New York city about one hundred sixty-one years ago. The purpose of the convention was to consider the stamp act, Greville's obnoxious scheme of taxation. Tim Ruggles of Massachusetts was chairman of the congress, where delegates from nine states met.

In its two weeks' session the congress adopted a "Declaration of Rights," written by John Cruger; a "Petition to the King," by Bob Livingston, and a "Memorial to Both Houses of Parliament," from the pen of James Otis.

Had the powers that misruled England at this time paid more attention to the words of these earnest men history might have taken a different turn, but the figurehead on the English throne and the self-inflated ministers and coxcombs, who served him, were deaf to the distant thunder of discontent—and "lost a world."—Chicago Journal.

Big B

"Now, gentlemen," said the president of the Wisteria Suburban Golf club, "how soon shall we lay out another links and move into it?"

"Didn't we move three months ago?" asked the chairman of the greens committee.

"We did, but they are putting up another row of apartments on the West side, which entirely blots out the sun."

"How much money is in the treasury?"

"Oh, a couple of millions. We made real money the last time."

"But is this golf?" inquired a dub in the rear.

"My dear boy," replied the president soothingly, "we no longer live in the suburbs to play golf; we live here to make money in real estate deals by moving from one course to another."

"She Bends to Fight"

A ten-year-old girl came to one of the Indianapolis branch libraries the other day to get a book for her big sister. For a long minute she studied for the name of the book she wished. Then a triumphant smile came to her face.

"It's 'She Bends to Fight,'" she announced, triumphantly.

The librarian had to tell the child she didn't have a book by that name. She suggested she call up her home by telephone and check up on the name of the book. She called up the home and came back with this name of the book, "She Stoops to Conquer."—Indianapolis News.

Mayfair's Romantic Days

Mayfair, which is now one of the most fashionable residential districts in London, was originally a plot of land set aside by King Edward I as a fair ground, but later a complaint referred to it as "one of the most pestilent nurseries of impiety and vice, and one of the most notorious occasions of riot and disorder." Under James II's license the May fair was held, "not for trade and merchandise, but for music, drinking, gaming, raffling, stage plays and drolls." The gallants of the day built houses so as to be in reach of the fair, and Mayfair became the center of London's social life.

Thoughtful Burglar

A man convicted of burglary recently in Australia is reputed to be the most obliging member of his craft. He broke into the home of a store owner, extracted the keys to the safe and store from the owner's pockets, walked a mile to the store, where he looted the safe of $200, and then went back to the owner's home, replaced the keys and departed, after having closed the window he had forced open on his first entry.

French King First to Employ Sealing Wax

The first gummed envelopes were made in 1840 in England and three years later a machine was invented by Warren La Rue and Edwin Hill for folding and gumming the envelopes. Sealing-wax was not used until 1113, when Louis VI sponsored it in France.

Before that all letters and documents were sealed with the impression of a ring in clay. This device was superseded by the use of a lump of pitch, wax and plaster. Yellow beeswax was next used and was succeeded by sealing-wax mixed with other substances. This made a white, or nearly white, seal.

A century later red wax appeared and, some time after that, green. Billets-doux were next secured with yellow, brown, rose and blue wax. Black also was used at this period, but was mostly employed by the religious orders.

Wafers for seals were first used in Italy and were brought to France by French army officers, who thus were instrumental in introducing them to the rest of the world. The first wafers were cut from a thin sheet of dough, moistened and applied to the folded missive.

Tender Notes Burned by Mrs. Washington

After George Washington's death his widow burned every letter that she had received from him, with the exception of three or four that escaped apparently by accident.

No one has ever elucidated the motive behind this letter burning episode. Martha Washington knew at the time, indeed, the whole world knew, that George Washington was a star of the first magnitude in the field of history and that every scrap of his writing would be treasured and printed. Did she feel that his letters to her were so sacred in their intimacy that posterity had no right to read them?

But there are other tenable hypotheses. She was antidemocratic and antipublic to an extreme degree. Considering her as surrounded by such limitations of perspective, one may readily conceive that her motive may have been simply one of aristocratic secinsion.

In destroying his letters she effectually effaced herself, for she lived only in his reflected light. But that may have been what she wanted. The highest form of pride is a disdainful humility.—The Nation.

The Other One

The captain saw a young recruit trying to cook his breakfast with an amateurish fire. He showed him how to make a quick-cooking fire.

"Look at the time you're wasting," he said. "When I was in the Himalayas I often had to hunt my breakfast. I used to go about two miles in the jungle, shoot my food, skin or pinch it, then cook and eat it, and return to camp under half an hour." Then he added: "Of course, you have heard of the Himalayas?"

"Yes, sir," replied the recruit, "and also of Ananias."

Goldfish Aid Light Plant

Now the goldfish enters the ranks of man's dumb servants. Spray ponds, where water is cooled at small transforming stations along electric transmission lines, are being kept free from clogging moss by stocking them with the sparkling fish, says the Popular Mechanics Magazine. An interesting balance in numbers and food was maintained at one pond. When the moss was exhausted, some of the goldfish turned cannibals and devoured the others. The survivors kept the vegetable growth from accumulating around the nozzles.

Little Left to Be Said

The discussion about the origin of the word "carping" as used frequently in the expression, "carping critic," leads us to pick up an unused oar for a moment. The word is not from the French, but from the fish, and is so called because the carp is scaly, dumb, sneaking and full of bones. In the human variety the bones are mostly above the ears. The carp is also of the sucker variety, and will steal your bait. It is considered of absolutely no value. When caught it will try and flop back in the water.—Wichita Eagle.

Baby Wasp's Feast

The wasp, whose nest frequently is found under the eaves of a building or behind the blinds, is an expert spider catcher. She selects a spider of proper size, pounces upon it, thrusts her stinger into the most vulnerable spot and paralyzes her victim, reducing it to a helpless state without killing it outright. The spider then is taken to the wasp's nest and placed on the under side, the cell is closed and apparently forgotten. Soon afterward the egg hatches and the infant wasp is provided with a supply of food.—St. Nicholas Magazine.

Walking on Water

It is possible to walk on water, or at least on the surface of Lake Magadi, Kenya colony, Africa, because of the thick crust of carbonate of soda, commonly known as baking soda, which covers the lake's surface. This lake, which is fifteen miles long and four miles wide, even at the height of summer has the appearance of being completely frozen over. The lake is impregnated by sodium carbonate, in the same way Great Salt Lake water is full of salt.

Might Reasonably Be Called "Fixed Income"

A negro was arrested at the instance of his wife for nonsupport and refusal to work. He was being cross-examined by a young lawyer, who was the law partner of a local politician, called Colonel Benson. During the examination of the negro the young lawyer asked:

"Dick, have you any fixed income?"

The negro was puzzled by the term. Counsel explained that the expression meant a certainty of money paid, not for odd jobs, but for steady employment; in other words, a compensation at stated intervals on which one could absolutely rely.

Upon the conclusion of the counsel's remarks, the negro's face brightened.

"Ah done fink Ah hab a fixed income, sah," he said.

"And what is this fixed income?" was the next question.

"Well, sah," he answered with a broad grin in the direction of Colonel Benson, "de colonel dar allers gibs me fo' dollahs an' a sack ob flour on election days."—Everybody's Magazine.

Ancient Spanish City Holds Open-Air Court

Justice, swift and certain, is meted out every Thursday morning at the Tribunal de las Aguas, or the Court of the Waters, in the Spanish city of Valencia. The courtroom is the pavement, open to the blue sky, and has been thus for five centuries. The judges' bench is a sofa, appearing from some mysterious hiding place, and a portable iron railing provides the bar of justice. There are seven judges. The plaintiff makes his statement, then the defendant states his side of the case. Any interruption brings a fine. One judge announces the verdict and there is no appeal from the decision. Neither the government of Spain nor that of Valencia has any part in the court, yet they honor its acts. None of the decisions is ever recorded and no lawyers are permitted to appear before the judges. —National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Unshaved Saints

English artists in stained glass have been perturbed by the complaint of the chancellor of the diocese of Chester that ecclesiastical windows do the saints sparse justice in presenting these holy men wearing beards. Artists in stained glass retort that they aspire to present their subject with as much accuracy as possible, and that history shows most of the saints wore beards, especially as they labored in countries where conditions rendered shaving difficult and unusual. Thus, despite protests of the offended chancellor, stained-glass windows in churches will in future, as in the past, present views of saints "bearded like the pard."

The Higher Life

What I know is that there is more in life than anything man can do or say, that there is an immortal spirit whose history, whose struggles, whose victories and defeats give the whole meaning to this life which is only one short paragraph in the book of that greater life. These are our fleshy conditions and we must obey them, but through them, always, we must be waiting, listening, for ever at attention to catch the movement of that other life. Your honor, your courage, your sacrifice, your gentleness, kindliness, if you lose these things you had as well be a sheep's carcass hanging in any butcher's.—Hugh Walpole.

Porpoises Visit America

In the mouth of the mighty St. Lawrence river, and often, when it is very stormy, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, may be seen the huge slow-moving porpoises.

About the color of dirty sea water, these huge fish, some of them six to eight feet long, slowly appear on the surface of the water and slowly dive with the motion of a big revolving wheel.

Porpoises are now chiefly prized for the oil and leather which they yield, although they, as well as their cousins, the dolphins, were once an article of diet.

A Janitor of Arts

Charlie Johnson had for several years served faithfully as the caretaker of the "South building," one of the dormitories at the University of North Carolina. One day he came into the president's office and presented his resignation.

Doctor Battle expressed some regret, saying that he hated to lose him.

"Yaas, sir," replied Charlie, "but you see it's dis way, Mr. President. You know I'se a preacher, and de bishop at de las' conference has done sent me down to Tarboro, N. C., 'cause he says dat charge needs a university man!"

Jealousy to Order

"Now look jealous!" commanded a director of a young actor he was testing in a close-up. The young actor tried his best; he looked pained, disgusted, angry, but the facial expression of jealousy eluded him. "I guess you can't do it," grumbled the director. He called another actor.

The discomfited youth sank into a chair and watched his rival step in front of the camera. After a moment the director turned sharply to the youth in the chair. "That's it!" he cried. "Hold that expression!" And he grabbed the youth and forced him in front of the lens.

EVERYDAY GOOD THINGS

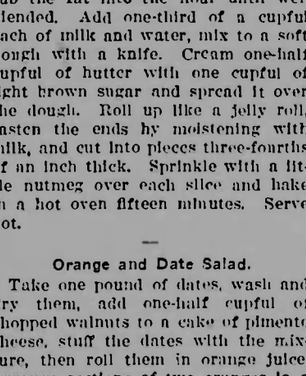
IF NEW beets have been canned, or fresh ones are in the market, the following will be a dish which the family will like: Take two bunches of new beets, well cooked, slice them very thin and sprinkle with a tablespoonful of sugar, add the juice of a small lemon and the juice of three oranges with a tablespoonful of butter. Mix well, heat until hot and serve with a dash of cayenne.

Caramel Biscuit.

Mix and sift two cupfuls of flour and four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, add one teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful each of lard and butter, rub the fat into the flour until well blended. Add one-third of a cupful each of milk and water, mix to a soft dough with a knife. Cream one-half cupful of butter with one cupful of light brown sugar and spread it over the dough. Roll up like a jelly roll, fasten the ends by moistening with milk, and cut into pieces three-fourths of an inch thick. Sprinkle with a little nutmeg over each slice and bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes. Serve hot.

Orange and Date Salad.

Take one pound of dates, wash and dry them, add one-half cupful of chopped walnuts to a cake of pimento cheese, stuff the dates with the mixture, then roll them in orange juice. Arrange sections of two oranges in a salad bowl with water cress. Serve with the dates and French dressing. Prunes and celery may be used in place of the dates and nuts.



Coddled Eggs.

Place eggs to be cooked in boiling water, using a pint for each egg. Cover tightly and let stand on the back of the stove. Remove the eggs from six to eight minutes for a soft one, fifteen minutes for a medium-cooked egg, and if wanted hard cooked, leave half an hour. Eggs cooked in this way are very easily digested, as the hard-cooked egg has a yolk dry and mealy from long, slow cooking, while the white is tender, though well cooked.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

MAKE-BELIEVE WHISKERS

FROM the famous museum of the University of Pennsylvania comes the news of the discovery of the oldest portrait of a human being in the form of a picture of Ibi-Sin, the last king of Ur, known to Bible students as Ur of the Chaldee.

The official explanation of this kingly fashion of beards is that the gods of those ancient times were all conceived of and pictured as wearing long beards, and the rulers, in order to inspire in their subjects and for themselves a veneration approaching that bestowed on deity, decreed that all reproductions of their countenances should be clothed with imposing beards.

The make-believe tendency of the human mind has always been to impress the unknowing with a false appraisal.

The poor girl buys and wears a rabbit or cat-skin coat dyed a beautiful brown in the hope that the passer-by will think it originally was worn by a sportive seal.

The rich man goes to the opera and suffers through an evening of music which he does not understand nor enjoy in order that he may impress some of his friends with the idea that he has reached the point in culture where arias and cadenzas, tempo and phrasing mean something definite to his dollar-filled mind.

We all of us indulge ourselves to a greater or less extent in make-believe.

We all wear some kind of whiskers to make ourselves look like what we are not. But sooner or later we are all found out.

The Chaldean king ruled more than four thousand years ago, but at last we know that his face was smooth and that his whiskered presentment, if he ever copied the custom of his times, was for the purpose of making people believe him to be what he really was not.

We all of us show our real selves sooner or later.

The veneer which we put on cracks and the real thing that is underneath shows through.

What we should have done was not to cover up that of which we were ashamed with an imitation of something better. We should have made the thing underneath into a reality of which we had reason to be proud.

Making-believe doesn't pay. It didn't pay the king of Ur. It will not pay you.

Shakespeare, who wrote wisely on more subjects than any other writer of all time, put the thought of personal honesty and individual frankness into the mouth of Polonius in words that should be a part of the daily creed of every man, woman and child:

This above all—To thine ownself be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

John Paul Jones

John Paul had a reason for not communicating to his family or making public why he took the name Jones; so to account for it, the imagined incident of a planter by the name of Jones making William Paul his heir was invented. There was no such planter. William Paul lived and died William Paul and by his will left his property to his sister (his will being recorded at Fredericksburg, Va., where William lived). John Paul assumed the name of Jones before he came to Virginia in 1773.—Pathfinder Magazine.

A Conservative Wish

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

NEW YEAR'S! Of course it's the regular thing
To wish you full many a blessing.
I do!—for I hope that the New Year will bring
You pleasure beyond all expressing.
And yet if it shouldn't, as sometimes occurs,
Good men and good women, good ladies and sirs,
I hope that at least it will bring you a mind
To keep you contented, whatever you find.

New Year's! Well, many will wish you a heap;
I join in their wishes, and gladly.
But I hope that at least what you have you can keep,
And that won't be doing so badly.
It's easy to wish and it's easy to want,
But some things you can have and some things you can't,
And happy the woman and happy the man
Contented at least with the things that they can.

New Year's! My wishes may seem rather tame,
Conservative, solemn and sober;
And yet you will maybe remember the same
Along in July or October.
Though maybe I may not have wished you a feast
You know what I wished that I meant it at least,
May say that I really was kinder to you
Than people who wished what could never come true.

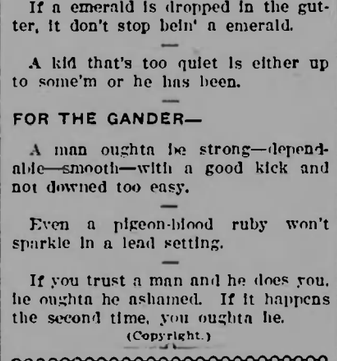
How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON



"FEELING BLUE"

TO "FEEL BLUE" is to be depressed and unhappy, sick at heart. And it is in the words "sick at heart" that we find the thread which leads us to the origin and justification for the popular use in this manner of the word "blue."

When people are physically sick they are usually pale; and in an extremity of weakness and debility the skin and the lips, particularly the latter, take on a bluish tinge. Frequently we hear the term used in a case of great cold, as "She is frozen blue." And it is to this connection of physical sickness that the phrase "feeling blue" is traced which describes mental or "heart" sickness.

The Sandman Story

By Martha Martin

MRS. CAT, HOUSEKEEPER

"MEOW, me-ow, me-ow," said Mrs. Cat, "how I do enjoy the warm sun!"

Now Mrs. Cat was sitting on the back porch and Mrs. Black Cat, the neighbor's cat, was with her.

"Yes, it is very nice," said Mrs. Black Cat, "very nice indeed."

"And pray tell me how do you like housekeeping?" Mrs. Black Cat asked.

"You were a kitten so short a time ago, and now you are grown up and have kittens of your own. Dear me, dear me, me-ow, me-ow, how time flies, as people say.

"Only so short a time and you were nothing more than a little bit of a thing running around!

"It makes us old cats feel pretty ancient I can tell you.

"Yes, it makes me feel sad and old to think of how the young generation

"The Best Has Always Been Given to Me."

of cats is creeping up on us. Why, really, I remember when you hadn't your eyes opened. But I asked you about housekeeping and how you liked it?"

"Well," said young Mrs. Cat, "I really like it very much. I find I have good service. There is the cook. She never forgets my meals.

"She has the best of milk and it is good rich milk, too. She gives me delicious breakfasts of bacon and often I have liver for dinner or some other delicacy.

"I am glad to say she doesn't give me my food in too big pieces. She has it all carefully chopped up fine for me so it is nice and easy to eat it.

"I would not like it if she became careless. I must say I'm not bothered with the 'help' problem as some people speak of being bothered with it. I have the best of service.

"Of course I am quite sure the cook knows she cannot do any way with me. She feels, I know, that I am used to the best. My mother used to say to me when I was young:

"'Always make creatures think you're used to the best. If you let them think you're satisfied with any old thing they'll give you any old thing.' And I've found my mother's advice very good.

"I have shown that I expected the best and the best has always been given to me. Then I have a lovely warm bed for the kittens which the cook fixed for me. It is so nice and soft, padded with lovely soft cotton. The kittens are very comfortable.

"And that is what I call very satisfactory housekeeping."

"Yes," said Mrs. Black Cat, "you are really very lucky. I am fortunate, too, though sometimes I do enjoy a mouse. However, it is not because I am not fed all I want. It is because I love the hunt and the chase."

"Well, now you speak of it," said Mrs. Cat, "I think I will go mouse hunting myself before long. Your speaking of it makes me think of pleasant past adventures. But let us take a little nap now.'

Mrs. Black Cat wasn't in the least insulted because Mrs. Cat suggested that they should keep quiet and rest. She, too, felt like a nap.

So the two cats closed their eyes and they had a delicious cat nap and after a while as the sun was going down Mrs. Black Cat got up and stretched herself and said:

"Well, Mrs. Cat, I must be going home. Supper will be ready for me. And I believe in being on time for my meals."

"The same with me," said Mrs. Cat. "And I know the kittens will be wondering what has become of me. I must go to my children. Well, glad to have seen you. Call again, Mrs. Black Cat. Good-by, me-ow, me-ow."

"Good-by, me-ow, me-ow," said Mrs. Black Cat. "I've had such a pleasant time and I'm so glad you're so comfortably situated. Good-by, me-ow, me-ow."

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

THE TURNED STONE

GO OUT in the spring and turn up a brick or a stone on the ground and look under it at the earth. The color of the earth exposed will be the color of the hair of your future husband. This is a "project" for girls and is apparently a more common superstitions in the southern states than in the northern, though it may be met with in widely separated localities. It is an especial favorite with the Maryland maidens, according to the Journal of the American Folk-Lore Society. This superstition is apparently akin to that of the lover's hair found in the shoe of the inquiring maiden when she hears the first call of the bird which is the harbinger of spring.

It is from the Northern races, evidently, that we inherit the superstition of the turned stone; for it and similar folk-lore ideas are found mostly, if not entirely, in the northern part of Europe. The Norse mythology was an overshadowing one for that part of the world and in the British Isles and in northern Germany its effect has remained solidly impressed upon British and Teutonic folk-lore. The superstition in question seems to be a survival of the idea contained in the story of Balder the Beautiful—that shining Norse god supposed by some authorities to have represented the spirit of vegetation which passes part of the year in the realm of the underworld and in spring reanimates the earth.

Balder himself will not come back until after Ragnarock, the "Twilight of the Gods," but if the speculations of James Frazer are correct, it would appear as if his death insured the annual return of vegetation. According to one version Balder was the son of Odin and the goddess Freya. The latter was the goddess of love. Long centuries before Tennyson wrote of "a young man's fancy" love and the springtime were conceived as being "affinities." The association of ideas is clear. In the season of love we turn the stone and the son of the goddess of love from the underworld sends the love token.

The Hotel Stenographer

By Roe Fulkerson

"WHAT are you giving up this year?" asked the House Detective.

"Oh, a lot of things," answered the Hotel Stenographer. "The first thing I gave up was dancing. I shall not dance till next year. My stable of dancing partners has run down anyway. I had four men who were taking me out; two of them were regulars and two of them were once-in-a-whiles but I am at the point where there is no thrill dancing with any of them.

"Going to dances scares me cold about matrimony. The first time a sheik takes me to a dance and we skid across the polished floor and I feel his strong protecting arm around me and experience his firm gliding amidst the maze, I think of nothing but that firm arm around me for all time, guiding and protecting me against the snares and pitfalls of a wicked world.

"It is like that for the first two or three times. Then I realize that he says 'Tim-tum' when the music stops and that annoys me and I notice that now and then instead of backing me, he backs himself and bumps into people on the floor, and then he is not as careful as he could be rounding the turns and when he tries to kiss me good night he bores me instead of thrills me and I begin to wish some other fellow would take me to the next dance. Next thing I duck dates with him in hopes that some new aspirant to my heart and hand will ask me out!

"As changeable as that about dancing partners, Kelly, how will it be if I say those fatal words that tie me to just one for all time? Will I get tired of looking at him at breakfast and will I find out after I marry him that he takes meat, potatoes and bread on his fork at one time and stuffs the balanced ration in his mouth all at once? But I have given up dancing until next year and will have a new crop then, so why worry?"

"Then, you silly old boy, it's easy. Only speculate every other day."—Suns Gene, Paris.

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At 21—Gutzon Borglum Began His Art Studies.

"AT ABOUT this time I entered an art school for the first time, in San Francisco.

"Previous to that I ran away from St. Mary's, a boy's school near Topeka, Kans., where I remained for two years, drawing more than I studied, and where the teacher made me do pictures and statues of the saints and the pope to be used in the chapel.

"They had me do too much of that, and I got tired and ran away, returning to my parents in Omaha. On the way I bought the first real paints I ever owned.

"In Omaha I attended the public schools, but went on drawing in my books and etching on my slate. I never had received any instruction in the technique of art except from an occasional, itinerant teacher, who was no good.

"Then my father took us to Los Angeles, where the color in the hills, the vividness in the sunrises, had always so inspired me, and there I gave myself over to painting. Most of my pictures were of horses, Indians and frontier life. Some of them were sold locally, and in that way I earned enough money to go to San Francisco and to the art school, where I remained two years, meeting with fair success.

"After going back to Los Angeles for a year I decided to go East. I had just enough money to get me as far as Omaha; but I took along my entire collection of paintings and bronzes and sold them to a private collector in that city. He gave me $2,000 for the lot, and with that money I went to Paris. There I studied at the Academie Julien and Ecole des Beaux Arts.—Gutzon Borglum."

TODAY—Borglum is the famous sculptor who was engaged in the herculean task of transforming Stone mountain, Georgia, into a memorial for the Confederate heroes, by carving in relief, on its smooth granite surface, figures of General Lee and other leaders.

Borglum's method of accomplishing this extraordinary work was highly ingenious. A lantern was to throw images from slides on the surface of the hill at night, the exact-sized images of the figures to be sculptured; these images were then to be outlined by painters. In the morning workmen were to go over these outlines with pneumatic stone drills and so the figures were to be carved.

Borglum is the creator of many famous art works, including the celebrated figure of the seated Lincoln, in Newark N. J.

GETTING UP NIGHTS

Tells You There Is Danger Ahead. A Healthy Bladder Does Not Act at Night.

J. H. Dorton, W. Graham, Va., says: "I had to get up seven or eight times at night for forty years. I thought it was my age. After taking Lithiated Buchu a short time, I am alright." Lithiated Buchu cleanses the bladder as Epsom Salts do the bowels, thereby relieving irritation, driving out foreign matter and neutralizing excessive acids. These are the causes of unnatural action of the bladder at night. Lithiated Buchu (Keller Formula) is not a cheap medicine. The tablets cost 2 cents each. Sold at all leading drug stores or Keller Laboratory, Mechanicsburg, Ohio. Locally at Gonder's Pharmacy.—Advertisement.

Tomorrow evening there will be a roll call of Past Chancellors when refreshments will again be served.

The contest which was outlined at the session of the lodge two weeks ago, is well under way, the membership being divided into two classes, the Bulls and the Bears.

Henry Lauer, S. D. Whipkey and J. H. Loar were appointed the refreshment committee for the coming year, while H. L. Stemple, W. W. Dawson and I. R. Rudy will compose the entertainment committee. This latter committee will provide some form of entertainment at the weekly meetings of the lodge.

Miner Caught by Heavy Fall of Rock In Mine

Argel Wilson, aged 21 years, whose home is in Garrett county, near Frostburg, and employed in Mine No. 10 of the Consolidation Coal Company in Allegany county, had the ligaments of both his legs twisted while at work two miles underground last Saturday morning. LOCAL FORD AGENCY IS LEADER IN POINT OF SALES

In the District Supplied by Pittsburgh Branch of Company—Oakland Salesman at Top.

Charles Reckard returned home on Sunday from Pittsburgh and New York City, where he had been in company with E. S. Evans, of Terra Alta. In Pittsburgh they attended a meeting of Ford agents and in New York City, where they spent Saturday, the automobile show was the attraction. Mr. Reckard earned the trip by virtue of the fact that he led in the sales force of the Evans organization during 1926, his individual sales and delivery totalling 126 cars, while the next highest salesman, M. L. Keller, of Kingwood, had a total of 119 cars to his credit. The entire number of Fords disposed through the Evans agency during 1926 was 649, this total being greater than any other agency in the Pittsburgh District. While in Pittsburg Mr. Evans was in receipt of a congratulatory telegram from the home office of the Ford Motor Company upon this accomplishment.

Respectfully submitted,
DELBERT DAVIS,
Finance Officer for 1926.

The aforegoing statement gives an idea of the work of the local Post. It also observes as an indication of the fact that some real progress was made in 1926. The Post is now out of debt and has something to go along with. Some of the "old bills" listed in disbursements were three or four years old. In paying them the Post has placed itself upon a clean sheet for 1927 and with this clean sheet they are starting out the new year.

To every ex-service man we extend an earnest request to join with us. The dues are $4 per year. Of this amount $2.00 goes to State Headquarters, National Headquarters and to the American Legion Monthly, the official publication of the Legion.

Come with us, ex-service men, and let us make our Post worthwhile to the Legion, our community and therefore to ourselves. D.

Two Automobiles Wrecked

Two automobiles were wrecked last week near Boynton, one of them belonging to Lloyd Fuller of West Salisbury, the other to Oscar McKenzie, of Little Crossings, Md. Mr. McKenzie's car was wrecked at the foot of the John Wright hill, the wreck being caused by some children coasting down the hill and almost before he knew it was so close to some of the youngsters and their sleds that he could not stop his car in time to avoid running over them without steering it off the road, which overturned the car and badly damaged it. However, no one was hurt in either of the wrecks. Those who wish to coast should not do so on State roads because of the heavy automobile traffic. Coasters are a menace to motorists and motorists are a menace to coasters.—Meyersdale Republican.

Addition to Library.

Several books have been added to our library this year. Among them are ten volumes of "The Best of the World's Classics," and two volumes of "In Darkest Africa," donated by Mrs. Fred Martin. We thank Mrs. Martin very much for these books. We have also received from the O. H. S. Glee Club ten volumes of "The Lock and Key Library." We appreciate donations to our library at any time. The library is one of the great factors of education in our school, and therefore it must be built up.

LITERARY SECRETARY.

The Bear Creek Philosopher.

"Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge certainly get along well together," remarked Uncle Billy Gamester when he read that only two dishes had been broken at the White House in the past four years.

TRAINED TEACHERS IN THE STATE SHOWS INCREASE

1,200 More Of First Grade In Rural Schools Than In 1921, Dr. A. S. Cook Says.

A survey recently completed shows that 1,200 more teachers holding first-grade certificates now are employed in the twenty-three counties of Maryland than in 1921, Albert S. Cook, State Superintendent, said one day last week. It is the goal of the department to have fully trained teachers in every elementary school in the State.

The check by the State Department of Education found that 2414, or 78 per cent, of the 3,071 teachers employed in white elementary schools are graduates of normal schools, or have equivalent education. The number of trained teachers employed this year is a gain of 200 over 1925, Mr. Cook declared. The percentage of teachers having the desired qualifications has nearly doubled, rising from 40 per cent in 1921 to 78 per cent in 1926.

Two Counties Reach Goal.

Baltimore and Queen Anne's counties have 100 per cent of their elementary teaching staff trained. Three counties, Garrett, Prince George and Washington, have gained more than one hundred trained teachers in the five-year-period, the survey showed. Garrett county, with only twelve normal school graduates five years ago, now has 115 first-grade teachers.

According to Mr. Cook the entire burden of the increased salaries for better trained teachers does not fall upon financially poor counties. The State Equalization Fund, he asserted, is especially helpful in making it possible to employ each year a larger number of trained teachers without adding to the county school tax rate.

Allegany county ranks third with a percentage of 94 in trained teachers, while Calvert and Montgomery counties follow with percentages of 90 each.

A table for 1926, prepared by Mr. Cook, showing the number of elementary teachers in each county and the number and percentages of teachers holding first-grade certificates, follows, the first column of figures denoting the total number of teachers; the second column the number of trained teachers, and the third column the percentage of trained teachers:

Queen Anne's	62	62	100
Baltimore	347	347	100
Allegany	315	297	94
Calvert	29	26	90
Montgomery	143	128	90
Kent	58	51	88
Prince George's	189	165	87
Talbot	55	48	87
Howard	59	50	85
Wicomico	109	90	83
Caroline	71	58	82
Anne Arundel	152	124	82
Hartford	125	94	75
Worcester	80	58	73

Cecil	101	62	61
Somerset	82	50	61
Charles	64	33	52
St. Mary's	50	21	42
Totals	3071	2414	78

"Everything in the school program in Maryland now is designed to bring about better classroom instruction—first, through the employment of teachers trained at normal schools, and, second, by provision for continued growth of teachers in service through helpful supervision and attendance at summer school every four years," Mr. Cook said.

Cites Aid to Rural Schools.

"The high schools have been sending one-fifth of their girl graduates to the normal schools. Two-thirds of those who graduate return to teach in their home counties. Through State aid from the Equalization Fund the poorest counties can afford to fill vacancies with these graduates from their own county.

"With a payment of $100 over and above the amount paid in other schools of the county to normal school graduates who take charge of one or two-room schools it has been possible to staff with normal school graduates 61 per cent of the one-room schools, which have always suffered from untrained teachers. This is Maryland's way of equalizing opportunities for pupils in rural schools."

Trained Teachers In Garrett County By Districts.

In the following table are given the election districts in Garrett county in which the 115 trained teachers listed above are placed in schools. Deer Park election district, for instance, has the highest percentage of trained teachers, it being 92 per cent.

The first column indicates the district; the second number of teachers employed; the third the number of trained teachers and the last column shows the percentage of trained teachers.

Bear Seen Near Swanton.

Peter Bowser, who resides on the mountain side north of Swanton, was in to see The Republican early Monday morning and related a story to the effect that on Friday a black bear of tremendous dimensions appeared at the home of William Brenneman, which is located in the neighborhood of Mr. Bower's farm, and at the moment Mr. Brenneman was engaged in building a fire in his yard preparatory to butchering. Happening to glance up from his labors he beheld the bear which had entered the yard through the gateway and was standing but a few yards distant. A second or two later the distance between man and beast was consideably lengthened, for Mr. Brenneman made a break for the house to get his gun and the bear broke for the timber at the identical instant. When Mr. Brenneman reappeared the bear was out of sight, but he heard several rifle reports at some distance and upon investigation found a neighbor armed with an army rifle who had "done his durndest to kill the varmint, but he was goin' in high and I don't think the bullets overtook him," is reported to have been one side of the conversation between Mr. Brenneman and his neighbor. An examination of the tracks left in the snow by the bear showed them to be at least five inches across and long in proportion, indicating that the beast was not small by any means.

NEW LAUNDRY OPERATING

Work Started In Plant Friday, With a Number of Employes

Wheels of industry turned for the first time in the new and modern laundry in Oakland last Thursday afternoon, when, for a short time, tests were made by the erectors of the new equipment.

Little progress was made on Thursday, however, for the reason that when the large steam boiler reached 125 pounds of pressure the pop off valve opened and failed to close until the entire volume of steam had escaped. Efforts were made by the erectors and by the manager, W. A. Johnson, to check the valve, but the intense heat created by the escaping steam in the boiler room made it humanly impossible to reach the valves, even though wet blankets and cloths around the bodies of the workmen were used in their attempt to do so.

By Friday evening all repairs had been made and tests were completed, and Saturday evening showed a vast amount of laundry ready for the patrons of the concern.

Between $11,000 and $12,000 has been expended by the owners, Johnson Brothers, for the new equipment, all of which has not yet arrived. Enough of the equipment to carry on the business however is here, and at the present time there are six or seven employees working in the laundry.

DIED.

MRS. MARY BELL GRIMES.

Mrs. Mary Bell Grimes, wife of Attorney William D. Grimes, and for many years a prominent figure in the social and charitable activities of Pittsburgh, died Saturday night at the family residence, 802 S. Negley avenue, East End. Mrs. Grimes spent her girlhood days in Oil City, Pa., where she was a charter member and officer of the Belles Lettres Club. In Pittsburgh she was affiliated with the Twentieth Century club, the Daughters of 1812 and the Third Presbyterian church. During the influenza epidemic, which swept over the country shortly after the World War ended, Mrs. Grimes served as a volunteer nurse at the Magee Hospital. She leaves her husband; a son, Murray Grimes of Pittsburgh, and a daughter, Mrs. William Booth of Sewickley.—Pittsburgh Post. The deceased was a sister-in-law of Mr. Bushrod Grimes, of Mountain Lake Park, and of Mrs. George L. Sneed, of Keyser, West Va.

In recognition of the services and ability of Mr. U. G. Palmer, Supervising Principal of the Verona (Pa.) public schools the Harrisburg Convention of the Pennsylvania State Educational Association in session during the recent holiday week, was honored by being elected a delegate to represent the Pennsylvania State Educational Association at the summer meeting of the National Educational Association at Seattle, Washington, which will convene the week beginning June 26, 1927. The Pennsylvania State Educational Association numbers in its membership more than sixty thousand. To be selected to represent this large body of teachers is an outstanding tribute to the worth, standing and respect which Mr. Palmer has as an educator.

The United States is the most reckless nation in the world, says a general safety agent for one of the largest railway companies in the country. He deplores the increasing accidents and predicts still more of them. We are a nation of people who "take a chance." We do not like to wait and we do not want to take time in getting to places. So we smash ahead, more or less regardless of what we are running into.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 16, 1927.

THE CHRISTIAN'S USE OF THE BIBLE.

Deut. 6:4-9; II. Tim. 3:14-17.

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and light unto my path.—Psalm 119: 105.

THE BOOK WE STUDY.

"Do you have a Bible in your home?" asked the agent. "Indeed I have; I wouldn't think of living without one in the house. I'd expect it to be struck by lightning." That is not the ordinary reason for possessing a copy, but it does reveal an attitude all too common. The book becomes a fetish that is as protective as the horse shoe or the idol of the pagan. Its contents are a matter of indifference. Yet it is the content that is important. For it represents the selected bit from a far higher literature created by the Hebrews in their history of some 1500 years. It is only a very small part of what they wrote, much of which was as ephemeral as some of our own "best sellers" that will be unknown in a few years. If one studies English literature it is not hard to list its great names and books and confine them perhaps to a "three foot shelf," as Dr. Eliot did. This is what we find in the Bible—the winnowings of Hebrew literature so that what we have is the fine grain from the process. If for no other reason than that it is worth the attention of any thoughtful reader. And like the cullings of any other literature its contents are varied enough to maintain interest. History, poetry, declamation, stories, letters, biography, personal reminiscence from old diaries and pithy saying are all among its treasures, as they are from any other race collection. Chiefly they represent the record of adventurous souls who dared advance beyond their fellows in their search for God. For He was the passion of the Hebrew and among their rugged hills they thought much and listened for His voice among the silences of their open places until they heard things that the bustling, hurrying folk of the thronged street never catch. It is this uniqueness of revelation that arrests one's thinking and challenges one's living. And it is within its pages that that one only character, Jesus Christ, carries one into the presence of a Father for the whole world. Whatever we may gain from a comparison with the religious writings of others not one of them holds a figure like His. It is because an incomparable life lies at its heart that it is the incomparable literature of the religious world.

THE BOOK WE TEACH.

Part of our text is taken from Deuteronomy, the book that was voted the constitution of the land. It consists of six Mosaic addresses proclaiming love as God's motive in His government and love of the motive of obedience to it. Its worth may be judged from its seeming to have been a favorite with Jesus. This was to become the possession of the heart until under its thrilling compulsion God should be throned in the life. Out of such understanding of our relationship to our Lord comes the impelling impulse of the teacher. The truth contained in its pages are to be taught to the children about us. Now the Hebrew school was one of the home and the parent was the school-master. The injunction for teaching was finely followed and the result appeared in the religious consciousness of the people. Conversation was the second method and the bazaars and city gates offered groups of adults among whom the precepts were a basis of discussion and a form of adult education in religion. Publicity by posting them on door-posts and gateways gave still another method for injecting them into the thinking of the people. It was a very complete system that was supplemented by the synagog schools after the exile and by the Temple University in the days of Jesus and Saul. With us there has come a change. The state is forbidden to teach this body of literature and the home has resigned its function in favor of the church school, so that we are much less thorough than even the Jew of today. It has placed the Protestant bodies in the place of utmost responsibility, for it was sectarian rivalry among them that took it out of the curriculum, and these groups must provide a cue for the conditions existing today. For a good number of our youth, estimated as high as twenty million, are unconnected with any church school.

THE BOOK WE MISUNDERSTAND.

Some folks turn to the Bible for denominational sanction, some for a mechanistic program of the ages, some for information in earth-formation and astronomical affairs, some for the guidance of life in terms of conduct. The statement of the lesson is that all Scripture is profitable—not infallible—for teaching truth about God and about human brotherhood, for reproof for wrong doing in these relationships, for correction of the wrong ways, so that redeemed living is possible, and for instruction in right-wiseness so that the attitudes of the life may be Christian ones. And the self-expressed purpose of it is that we may be completely furnished for doing good work in the world in which we live. If we take the Book within these borders and study it for the purpose given, there will be no question of its worth in the enrichment of all the finest things of character. It sets up a standard that we need to know as well as teach, for much so-called instruction is vitiated because it is entirely in the fields of speculation outside that for which it was intended, and while within it it is without a peer if one wishes to know about the formation of the earth a geology will serve a better purpose; if stars, he had better consult an astronomy. There is no conflict at all in the matter, for the Bible is fully scientific in its intended sphere.

THE BOOK WE FORGET.

One great trouble is the tendency to relegate the Bible and its truth to the realm of speculation and to refuse to accept its teaching as practicable for everyday living. "The Ten Commandments have no place in politics," is an expression that indicates what I mean. "The Golden Rule can not be the rule of the business world," is another. Yet if the principles given within it are not applicable to all of life they are not applicable to any part of it. And those who have been daring enough to attempt the following of these laws of moral guidance into whatever place they might lead have discovered new worlds. Take Mr. Nash and his phenominal success in the clothing industry by following the Golden Rule with regard to both employees and customers. When a prominent clothing merchant was asked what he thought of it he replied, "Mine G-; I wish I had thought of it first." But there was no hint of thinking it a good rule for himself to follow after the way had been shown.

Grantsville, January 11—The banks of the town held their annual meetings this afternoon, both of them re-electing all directors and officers. At the First National the board is composed of U. M. Stanton, C. A. Bender, A. C. Stanton, W. E. Stanton and Lewis Hockman. Mr. U. M. Stanton being president, Mr. C. A. Bender, vice-president, Mr. A. C. Stanton, cashier, and Mrs. Vadne Stanton, assistant cashier. At the First State the directors are J. J. Bender, F. W. Bender, J. A. Beachy, C. E. Ellithorp, Lewis Hanft, S. S. Miller and H. P. Miller. The officers are Mr. J. J. Bender, president, Mr. H. P. Miller, vice-president, C. O. Keller, cashier, and W. D. Getty, assistant cashier. Both institutions report a very satisfactory state of affairs, which speaks well for the community generally.

Much excitement prevailed in this locality Monday and today, regarding a large bear which was tracked yesterday afternoon on Meadow Mountain, having crossed the New Germany road, traveling north. Several men armed themselves sufficiently and gave chase, following him to the National Pike which he crossed about dusk. The chase was resumed this morning with about ten men, several of them guarding at the Pennsylvania State Line while others gave chase from the pike toward the line. Mr. Bruin, however, got safely into Pennsylvania without being actually seen, thereby adding to his length of days, as there is a law there protecting him. He rested over night near the line and was not aroused until those giving chase approached, while those who stood guard, became discouraged and retired, thereby giving him a safe crossing.

The Utopian Literary society of the high school held a meeting this afternoon, the principal feature being a debate: "Shall the Philippinos have their independence?" The affirmative was taken by Walter Reichenbecher and Velora Swauger; the negative by Helen Folk and Paul Wisseman. It was decided in favor of the affirmative Other numbers on the program was a song by the society, locals by Pearl Beachy, a solo by Viola Butler and a reading by Mildred Opel.

The weather has been quite cold, but pleasant. The roads are in splendid condition for sledding and much used hy people stocking their coal bins for sugar making season. On the State roads the motoring is excellent.

Just around the Corner

EVEN big-city folks must have their "neighborhood stores"! Most of them would no more think of going down town to fight their way through the crowds in search of a roast for dinner than they would of walking to the factory to get a pair of shoes.

City women know that their neighborhood stores can supply them just what they want — and that, in most cases, the service is more alert and friendly.

The same thing is true of this "neighborhood". Our merchants—the men whose ads you read in this paper —are in position to furnish your home with the best and most popular brands of goods. Not only can they save you money, but they gladly relieve you of a lot of worry and loss of time.

OFFICIAL AND UNOFFICIAL MEDDLERS.

The appeal of the President of the United States for the loyal support of the press and the people in exposing the purposes of official and unofficial meddlers in matters for which the President and State Department bear undivided responsibility—that is, meddlers both in and out of public office—should meet with universal response.

This nation has made it a policy to give full rein to the administration to handle such situations as have just arisen in Central America. It is to be assumed that the administration has far more reliable information than has the public, and that it has in mind only the protection of American rights and just interests.

Since propagand agencies, designed to handicap and embarrass the government of the United States, have reached the point where their meddling materially interferes with the successful handling of a foreign policy, it is time for the American people to protest. The President says that time has arrived.

Soon every newspaper office in the land will be flooded with propaganda emanating from a group of "unofficial" meddlers now in Mexico. Already the advance notices of its activities have reached the newspaper offices. These state that the purpose is "to study conditions in Mexico, make a survey and report to the American people." These observers are in the position of the Justice of the Peace who said he would deliberate on the case over Sunday and then decide for the defendant. Everybody knows what their report will be.

When the government of the United States raided the secret, illegal convention of communists at Bridgman, Michigan, in 1922, it found among other documents one outlining the plan for the organization of the Labor Defense Council. The plan was endorsed in Pussia. The organization under that name was later formed. It is now known as the Labor Defense Council. In that document appeared the following:

"The council will contain various radical and liberal elements not all communists, such as the American Civil Liberties Union, groups gathered about the liberal press like The Nation, The Freeman and the New Republic; liberal and working farmers' organizations like the Non-Partisan League and other tenant and farmers' organizations; also men prominent in public life who are willing to cooperate, such as legislators, editors, clergymen, professors and lawyers."

It would appear, from glancing over the list of the "unofficial" meddlers now in Mexico "to survey conditions and report to the American people," that the "liberal" editors, ministers and lawyers were not overlooked in selecting "meddlerh."

Since this, and similar movements, are chronically antagonistic to the policies of our government and chronically partisan in behalf of some form of radialism, it would appear time that not only American editors, but the American people, as a whole, become aroused.

This paper stands now as it has always stood, for sound Americanism. Thousands of well meaning, sincere and loyal American citizens are being led astray by the emotional appeal of the radical and subversive organizations. It is high time that in the matter of support of the American government in its controversies with foreign governments we should have a separation of the sheep from the goats.

Uncle Sam should have a prosperous year in 1927 unless all signs fail. This is the view of the leaders in the business and industrial world. The Associated Press recently made a survey of the situation and the results show that everywhere conservative Americans are optimistic about the immediate future.

Judge Gary, chairman of the U. S. Steel Corporation, declared that while no one can be certain about the future there is no reason why prosperity during the coming year will be seriously interrupted.

Continuing, he said that "if business shall be seriously diminished during the coming year it will be the fault of ourselves and not the fault of natural conditions or the lack of consideration and fair treatment by the National Administration."

The manufacturers base their prediction of a good year on the fact that industry is operating at a high rate of production; that there is ample money at reasonable rates; that people are contented and there are gradually fewer labor disturbances.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, is also optimistic about 1927, and declares in the American Federationist that conditions are strongly indicative that 1927 will be as good if not a better year than 1926. He adds that another favorable indication is the halt that has been called on communistic activities in New York City, declaring that so completely have the communists been discredited that it will be less easy to impose on the workers in the coming year.

"Prospects are good," Mr. Green declares in conclusion, "and our unions should be planning to keep abreast of this progress."

The predictions for a prosperous 1927, barring unforseen conditions, are therefore well night universal. While we are enjoying prosperity it behooves us not to forget the policies which have brought prosperity about. Only a few short years ago we were trying to recover from our part in the most disastrous war in all history.

The American people adopted a program which had for its policy the rehabilitating of the United States along sane and constructive lines and without a deviation from American principles. The principles included withdrawal so far as possible of the government from private enterprise, the adoption of a protective tariff and adherence to the time honored principle of non-interference in the affairs of Europe and a determination to have nothing to do officially with bolshevism.

There was a great outery agaist these policies from the internationalists who declared that the principles were short sighted and that they would result in the disintegration of Europe and the consequent impoverishment of the United States.

The results have proved that the nationalists were right. America is today generally prosperous and the future, so far as we can see, is bright. Nor has Europe been destroyed. On the other hand, the nations across the water are showing visible signs of improvement. All of them are looking forward to better days in 1927, and most of them feel that they have rounded the corner and come from the shadows into sunlight.

It is significant, too, that in many European countries there is a general demand for the adoption of American methods of business organization and procedure. Evidently a great many Europeans know a good thing when they see it, even if our own internationalists do not.

Dividends.

Preliminary reports from the Bureau of Communicable Diseases of the State Department of Health, show a marked decrease in typhoid fever and in diphtheria in 1926 in comparison with 1925. Here are the figures for sickness from these diseases, in the counties of Maryland, for the last five years:

	1926	1925	1924	1923	1922
Typhoid	854	1058	828	980	972
Diphtheria.	511	614	735	1057	1110

Commenting on the decline in these diseases, Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health said: "It is only when we compare the outbreaks in recent years with the sickness and deaths from the same diseases some years ago, that we are able to realize what dividends are being paid to the people of the State in the way of health and the freedom from disease as a result of the steady, persistent fight against communicable diseases by the State Department of Health and the medical profession, backed by the intelligent co-operation of the people of Maryland.

"To a large extent, this improvement has been brought about through the co-operation of the 'party of the third part'—the wide-awake individual. In the case of typhoid, it has been shown in the public spirited interest in community meaures for protecting water and food supplies from sources of infection, and in the steady progress, year after year, of individual protection through vaccination against the disease.

"The decline in diphtheria has been brought about in much the same way. Parents are realizing that it is possible to prevent that dread disease by having their children protected against it by the use of toxin-antitoxin, and are availing themselves of the opportunities offered. Not only life, but health is being saved, because the damaging after-effects are often more disastrous than the disease itself."

MARYLAND FARMING LAND VALUES SHOW SOME GAIN

But Average of $75.00 An Acre Still Is Much Below Figure Arrived at In 1920 Estimate.

Farm land values in Maryland have increased somewhat during the last five years, but are still much below values in 1920, according to estimates by the United States Department of Agriculture.

The department places the average value of farm real estate in Maryland at $75 an acre on March 1, 1926, against $72 an acre March 1, 1922. The value in 1920 was $91 an acre and in 1921 it was $75.

Other Southern States showing increased farm land values for the five-year period include North Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Texas. The average value for Virginia is placed at $36 an acre on March 1, 1926, against $57 an acre in 1922, the 1920 value being $68 an acre, and the 1921 value $65.

U. S. Average Declines.

While farm values in Maryland and other Southern States increased over the five year period, the average for the United States as a whole shows a decline from $85.26 an acre to $76.47 an acre on March 1, 1926.

Since 1920 farm-land values in the United States have declined approximately thirty per cent, although the department points out that the rate of decline has been less in the later years thus indicating an apparent trend toward stability.

The department sees two factors which may aid in checking any further decline in values. One of these is the probability that in a number of areas the foreclosures and other forced liquidations have exerted most of their influence on values, and the other takes into consideration the announced reductions in farm mortgage interest rates and possible further easing of the credit situation consequent upon improvement in country banking conditions and the large supplies of funds seeking employment in the investment markets.

The report shows that farm-land values at $75 an acre on the average in Maryland are higher than in any other South Atlantic State with the exception of Florida. The average value for Delaware is $66 an acres; Virginia, $56; West Virginia, $44; North Carolina, $68; South Carolina, $30, and Florida, $100. In this latter State the values are now less than in any other of the States listed.

The most severe declines since early 1920 are reported in the grain and live-stock states of the Middle West, coincident with a fall in prices of these products which held to the lowest levels of any of the country's major farm product groups.

Values in the Northeastern part of the United States, extending into Michigan and Wisconsin and South into the Virginias, fell relatively little, partly because prices of dairy, poultry and vegetable products to which this region is largely devoted, maintained the highest levels during the depression of any of the major groups of American farm products.

Farm Demand Lively

Particularly in industrial sections of the East, sustained or rising values were partially attributed to an apparently active demand on the part of urban workers for small farms. Although not directly entering into the census enumerations, considerable demand for farms for various recreational uses is considered to have exerted a sustaining influence in areas in this north eastern section.

With the exception of exceedingly severe declines since the 1920 peak in Georgia and South Carolina the average for the States of the cotton belt indicates a decline appreciably less severe than for the grain and live-stock producing States of the Middle West, although sharper than for the Northeastern dairy belt. In this movement values followed cotton incomes and cotton prices.

Up to the 1926 crop season prices had recovered to favorable levels after the bad break of 1920 and 1921, although they were less well sustained relative to the boom years than were dairy and poultry prices and income. Exceptionally severe ravages of the boll weevil and the exodus of Negro farm laborers and tenants appear to be responsible in large degree for the severe declines in Georgia and South Carolina.

A department survey of changes in farm ownership in Maryland during the twelve months ended March 15, 1926, shows that approximately 14 out of every 1,000 farms changed hands on account of forced sales and related defaults, and that in addition 32 out of every 1,000 changed ownership through voluntary sales.

The total changes in ownership for all reasons numbered 56 in every 1,000 farms in the State. The average for the United States was 60 out of every 1,000 farms, the largest turnover being in Montana, Florida and Colorado and the smallest in Delaware.

BLOOMINGTON PUPIL IS AWARDED ESSAY PRIZE

Nina Warnick, 13, Wins In National Safety Essay Contest

Stephen James, of the Highway Education Board, Washington, D. C., recently sent the following letter to Miss Mary F. Athey, principal of the Bloomington public school, which is self-explanatory, and which, along with the prize-winning essay referred to therein, is published in connection herewith:

HIGHWAY EDUCATION BOARD
Washington, D. C., Dec. 29, 1926.

Miss Mary F. Athey, Principal,
Bloomington School,
Bloomington, Maryland.

We are taking the liberty of sending these tokens to you for presentation to the pupil in the belief that you may wish to hand them to her at some school exercise or assembly. We believe the pupil merits some recognition of her success and feel sure that she will appreciate her prizes all the more if presented by you.

You will find a check for $5.00, made payable to Nina Warnick, enclosed with this letter, while a bronze medal is being sent under another cover.

Our 1926-27 National Safety Campaign is shortly to be announced. Literature will be sent you, and we hope to be favored with your co-operation in these contests.

Please accept our sincere thanks for your courtesy.

Sincerely yours,
STEPHEN JAMES.

The essayist, who is 13 years old, is a sixth grade student in the public school at Bloomington, the subject treated by her in her paper being "Safety First," and was as follows:

Claim prevention means better feeling from your fellow men and all others who are acquainted with you; it also represents efficiency from every one. Every loss and damage is a signal that something is wrong. Watch the signals and resolve that as far as you are concerned there will be no accident for which you are responsible or which you can prevent.

In 1923, ninety per cent of every one hundred dollars received for freight charges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was paid out in claims. In 1924, the mark was set at 75 per cent of every one hundred dollars. Let us cut this in half for 1925. It can be done. Will you help?

"Safety is a law" and has to be dealt with accordingly. Safety movement isn't a theory—its a crusade. Practice safety at all times, not only during a drive; get safety into your system.

"Safety above everything" is considered a very wise thing. We should endeavor to practice it always—to preserve life and limb; to accept the suggestions made by safety committees. Safety pays. Do not gamble with death.

We see so many instances where in every life a man takes a chance. We are sometimes led to believe that self-preservation is not the ruling impulse of man. To save a few seconds of time a man will continue to use an unsafe ladder rather than spend a few minutes repairing it. To avoid a trifling inconvenience, a worker, who has no interest in his company, will do that very thing, thinking the company is able to stand the expenses, but it isn't always the case. That isn't playing safe. A worker will sometimes, through thoughtlessness remove a guard on a machine which he knows has been placed there for his own protection. Thoughtlessness is a chief cause of many an accident. The thought of danger and its consequences are unpleasant, so we ignore them. We continue in blissful ignorance and thoughtlessness until we are rudely shaken out of it by an accident. Familiarity with danger leads us to despise it. We take chances for years and get away with it, gradually forgetting that danger exists. Safety requires constant thought, which is irksome to most natures.

To correct an unsafe condition requires time and effort, which we naturally shrink from. To some natures danger is a stimulus. To them security is monotonous and irksome.

Here is a poem that some men and in some cases women, too, should ever keep in mind. It's title is "Play Safe."

Another speeder went driving by
As fast as he could go,
He never paused to read the sign:
"Crossing ahead—go slow!"
He knew it all, this wise (?) speed king,
To learn, he'd not begun;
He drove the car upon the track—
A crash, and all was done.
This our advice to such speed fools:
"Stop; wait, or you may lose,"
A moment spent in reading signs
May save a life—now choose.

MT. LAKE PARK.

The cold wave and snowstorm last week, starting on Friday evening, has continued right along into this week, resulting in fine sleighing and is beginning to freeze the water on the lake. Only for the heavy fall of snow the ice would now be ready for harvesting.

During the holiday vacation the interior of the village school building was treated to two coats of paint, which the teachers as well as the pupils appreciate and which adds both beauty and comfort.

The special meetings at Loch Lynn U. B. church continue during this week. Rev. Fultz is preaching most helpful sermons which are being greatly enjoyed by the congregations. Rev. C. E. Cuppett is leading the singing.

The new bus line from here to Kingwood has added another convenience to our community.

Since I have had knowledge of Mt. Lake Park from its beginning, and also have in my possession the book of minutes of the late Rev. John M. Davis, I thought it might be of interest to your readers to give a short resume of the history of this far-famed summer resort which has proved to be helpful intellectually and spiritually to so many thousands.

During the autumn of 1881 there was a company of men came to Oakland, namely: Rev. C. P. Marsden, Major J. C. Alderson, Rev. Snodgrass and C. W. Conner, all of Wheeling, and Rev. E. W. Regan, of Morgantown, West Va.

Rev. Benjamin Ison was then pastor of the Oakland M. E. church. He and Rev. John M. Davis were called into a conference to aid in selecting a suitable location for a Christian summer resort. The first day they inspected the tract of land known as "William and Mary," lying northwest of Oakland and along the Youghiogheny River. This tract of land was thought fine for the purpose but did not extend to the limits of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

The following day they went to examine the land belonging to the Hoye estate and beginning on its western border about a mile from Oakland. J. A. Enlow joined the party with his little saddle horse and which Rev. Regan accepted and rode from where the party had left their spring wagon at or about the point where Hamilton Hall now stands, and rode south to the Baltimore and Ohio tracks, while the others inspected the land lying to the east and north and which at that time was all woods.

When the party had assembled at the point where the wagon had been left, Rev. Regan with much stress and emphasis said, "Brethren, this is foreordained for the place we are seeking," to which all agreed.

Rev. C. P. Marsden and Major Alderson were designated as a committee to wait on W. D. Hoye, one of the heirs, who lived where the Weber green houses are now located and who informed them the Mr. George Smith, of Bedford, Pa., was their agent. The following day these men went to see Mr. Smith and they contracted with him for the purchase of the Hoye interest in five hundred acres. Robert H. Gordon, of Cumberland, owned 300 acres adjoining the Hoye property, and upon their return from Bedford the party stopped in Cumberland and purchased the Gordon land, thus giving them eight hundred acres in all, with nearly a mile and a half of railroad frontage.

A survey of the property was later made by Mr. John Harned, who was assisted in the work by H. Lowe, W. D. Burton and James A. Enlow. The survey sarted at the double white oaks on which the Military Lots hinged. These trees stood on what is now known as the Dennett road and running parallel with the State road leading to Oakland. Sheriff W. D. Casteel advertises in today's Republican a sale to occur at Kitzmiller on Wednesday, February 9th, when he will sell, under an order of the Court, a residence property. And also upon the same day in the same place, Mr. E. R. Jones, assignee of the vendor's lien, will offer for sale a business property, notice of which sale also appear in today's Republican.

The next regular meeting of the Board of County Commissioners will be held on Monday, February 7th, at which time appeals from assessments on real and personal property will be heard, and following this meeting the books of the county will be closed for the 1927 levy. In addition to hearing appeals, routine business will also be transacted by the Commissioners.

A committee representing the telegraphers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is now in conference with officials of the road in Baltimore for the purpose of discussing wage increases requested by the telegraphers. Mr. E. A. Shaffer, of Oakland, is chairman of the union committee, and F. E. Blaser, assistant to Charles W. Galloway, vice-president of the railroad, represents the latter in the conference, which will likly continue several days.

At the corner of Alder and Third streets Monday morning, the automobiles driven by Rev. J. F. Eckenrode, who had as his passengers children en route to the parochial school, and Ray Teets, who was accompanied by Mr. J. T. Duke, collided. The latter's car was badly damaged and Mr. Duke received a nasty cut on his head and was bruised on his cheek. The school car was less seriously damaged and while one of the children was thrown out she escaped injury,

Messrs. L. H. and G. W. Diefenbach, father and son, both of Grantsville, were in Oakland Tuesday when they called at The Republican office. The elder Diefenbach is just now recovering from an injury he received several weeks ago when he was caught on a rapidly revolving shaft and whirled about it, the most serious injury received by him being a broken rib. The younger man, until recently cashier of one of the Grantsville banks, is engaged in the insurance and real estate business and does not allow the grass to grow nor the snow to accumulate beneath his feet; in other words he is a busy business man and is making a success of the new employment.

SAWS

By Viola Brothers Shore

FOR THE GOOSE—

THE woman that really knows life has got a smile in back of every tear and a tear back of every smile.

It's no good cryin' to the teacher, the doctor or the judge.

You can overindulge yourself weepin' just as much as laughin' and it's worse for your looks.

FOR THE GANDER—

Tellin' a woman anything about love is learnin' a porpoise how to swim.

The guy that climbs up the ladder might look more important, but an awful lot depends on the feller holdin' it at the bottom.

Goin' after them ain't the on'y way of gettin' women. But it's the best that's been discovered to date.

Mother's Cook Book

We shall advance when we have learned humility; when we have learned to seek truth, to reveal it and publish it; when we care more for that than for the privilege of arguing about ideas in a fog of uncertainty—Walter Lippman.

ALL GOOD THINGS

Make a custard with a quart of milk, a cupful of cream, a can of condensed milk, one tablespoonful of vanilla, a half cupful of sugar, and one crushed junket tablet dissolved in a tablespoonful of cold water. Warm the milk to lukewarm and mix all the ingredients; let stand in a warm place until thick. When cold, freeze, and when partly frozen add a half pound of chopped figs, which have been cooked with one-half cupful of sugar and three tablespoonfuls of orange juice. Finish freezing.

Fig Ice Cream.

Scald one quart of milk, add three teaspoonfuls of cornstarch mixed with a little cold milk and cook until thick. Cook slowly fifteen minutes. Beat the yolks of four eggs, add a half teaspoonful of salt and one-half cupful of maple sirup; beat into the hot mixture and cook until the egg is set. Add two cupfuls of hot cream and let chill; add one teaspoonful of vanilla and begin to freeze. When half frozen add one-half pound of chopped figs cooked until tender in boiling water, then mix with half a cupful of maple sirup, a little grated lemon rind and two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice.

Flemish Carrots.

Cut prepared carrots into thin slices and cook until tender in a little boiling water slightly salted. For one pint of carrots, melt a tablespoonful of butter, add a cupful of chopped onion, and one-half teaspoonful of sugar. Cover and cook until yellow, add one cupful of beef broth. Simmer twenty minutes and sprinkle with parsley.

Graham Cracker Cake.

Cream one-half cupful of shortening, add one-third of a cupful each of honey and sugar, add the beaten yolks of two eggs, one cupful of milk, two and seven-eighths cupfuls of rolled cracker crumbs mixed with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Add the stiffly beaten whites and bake in two layer tins about twenty minutes. Put together with jelly or jam filling and cover with chocolate icing.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

RESENTING DISCIPLINE

WHEN young men or young women, in the performance of their routine duties in the office, behind the counter, or "on the road," grow presuming and self-important, it is safe to predict they are riding for a fall.

People of this type, afflicted as they are with an overwhelming sense of superiority, take strange delight in "showing off"—in removing the shutters before anything is put in the windows.

In this gross display of egotism they unwittingly exhibit the limply-woven and haphazard stuff of which they are made.

It cannot be said that they are all inefficient or incapable, but they do lack in their make-up the sturdy, essential substance upon which to build solidly.

This regrettable thought of self dominates their weak mentality until it becomes an integral part of them, and governs in a large measure their mannerism, their intonation of voice and their haughty attitude towards those whose good-will and good opinion they should strive to cultivate.

This spirit of foolish pride, sad to relate, is becoming alarmingly noticeable among striplings just stepping on the threshold of real endeavor.

They rail against discipline, because they imagine it stamps them with a sort of commonality, indicative of their lowly position.

They have been so tried among the inconstant squalls and criticisms of their employers, so often urged to conform with rules and regulations intended for their betterment and the advancement of the business interest of the firm, that the whole world seemed forever scolding and calling them "to attention."

In this hapless mood they become disloyal, and like Tom Sawyer, explain: "Ah, if my 'boss' could only die temporarily!"

All of which is wrong, and which they themselves know is wrong.

The advice is for their good. It is intended to lift them from the rut and put them on solid ground where they can run the race in proper form, and take later in life their rightful place among the winners.

There is nothing so hot-headed, so plausibly foodhurdy in the verdant youth of today as this growing inclination to resent discipline. It's the best disciplined, the willing to be guided, the faithful followers of their leaders, who win the big prizes of life, and rise step by step to wealth and fame. Think it over.

THE BOY'S LINCOLN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

LINCOLN, I love you most for this:
I never knew a boy to miss:
The glory of your story. He Could be the boy you used to be,
In his imagination. You
Were one he understood and knew.
Though history was often dim,
You were no mystery to him.
With you, because he understood,
He worked the garden, cut the wood,
Or drove the wedges for his sire.
With you he lay before the fire
And saw strange fancies in the blaze,
The dreams God grants in boyhood days,
Or on some little journey took
Along some well-beloved book.
He had the bruise, the blow, the fall,
Yet had a mother through it all,
A second mother, wise and kind.
Yes, every boy could somehow find Himself in Lincoln, could behold
Within himself the boy of old.
Could hear his voice, and touch his hand,
A boy a boy could understand.

Lincoln, for this I love you best:
You struck a spark in boyhood's breast
And lit in boyhood hearts the fire
Of high ambition, that desire
(What flags are folded or unfurled)
That yet must somehow save the world.
For, if a lad could be the lad
That Lincoln was, if boyhood had
That common kinship, knew the truth
Of Lincoln's dreams in Lincoln's youth,
Yes, felt his pain and lived his joy,
If Lincoln was another boy,
Then boyhood, making manhood's plan,
Could think of Lincoln as a man—
Could dare to dream his dreams, and know
A boy may rise, however low
To any heights, however high,
If he, like Lincoln, dares to try.
Lincoln, for this I love you most:
That boyhood loves you. Men may boast,
But this is greatness. And today,
Whatever orators may say,
In this your greatest greatness lies:
I see your dreams in boyhood's eyes.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"SOUR GRAPES"

"DID you hear Smith say he would not take a western managership? Sour grapes, I say!"

So frequently in common speech we hear this phrase used with reference to a person who tries to depreeate something which he cannot have. The expression comes to us from one of Aesop's fables, "The Fox and the Grapes."

According to this story, which has been traced back to the collection made by Phaedrus, the ancient Greek, a fox was strolling on a hot summer's day through an orchard full of luscious grapes. He saw, high upon a vine, a particularly ripe and delicious looking bunch, just the thing to quench his thirst.

He drew back a few paces and made a jump for it, but just missed it. Two or three times more he tried without success. Then he turned and left them, sneering: "Those grapes are sour!"

And so in our speech today, when people pretend to despise something that is beyond their reach, we think of old Reynard in the fable that is thousands of years old, and say, "Sour grapes!"

The Sandman Story

THE BROWNIE BROTHERS

BILLIE BROWNIE and his brother Bennie were all ready for adventures. A boy and a girl who had wandered into Dreamland that evening had come to pay them a visit. And of course Billie and his brother were particularly anxious to entertain their guests as best they could.

And they were as ready for adventures as were their guests. They had been busy of late and had not had so much time for play and they were quite ready to begin playing at once.

Now the boy and the girl had never had many adventures. They had lived rather lonely lives, though it is true they had made a number of animal friends.

"Well," said the boy, as he saw Billie Brownie and his brother, "you are a fat pair, but oh, you do look so jolly."

"How nice of you to say so," the two Brownie brothers replied, and as they did so they hugged each other and fell over on the ground.

"Not hurt, I trust," said the girl.

"Not a bit of it," said the Brownie brothers together, as they picked themselves up.

"I do believe you're Brownies," said the boy.

"You are right," said Billie.

"My name," he added, "is Billie Brownie, and this is my brother."

He pointed with his left hand to Bennie for his right arm was around Bennie and his right hand was stroking Bennie's shoulder.

"I'm very happy, too," said the boy.

"And I am also," said the girl.

"So am I," said Billie, "which makes four of us happy."

"And now for our adventures! Our friend, Knight of the Mist, is on his way now. Ah, here he comes!"

And then the girl and the boy met Knight of the Mist. He was the great, great, great, great, great grandson, Billie Brownie explained, of the greatest old Knight of olden days, who always wore armor.

This Knight wore mist as his armor for he was the brave knight of the air.

"I am ready," said Knight of the Mist. "I hope you are!"

Oh, yes, they were ready, so they followed Knight of the Mist. He helped them into his very enormous airship; it was simply huge and looked like a car on a train.

After they had started they stopped off for one of the cows and one of the hens from the farm and the girl's pet cat and the boy's dog. Also a rooster was eager to go along, too. So they made quite a party as you can imagine.

Then they adventured up in the clouds and about the clouds. They paid a visit upon His Royal Highness, Sir Skyscraper, who was to be found in a big city. They found him to be a bumptious fellow with a fine opinion of himself and ambitions far greater than he could realize, for he had never really touched the sky with his greatest amount of reaching, but always he went along in his rather tremendous way—yet still not able to approach the sky territory.

The cow tried to appear as though used to all these modern conveniences which she was now seeing but it was not natural to her. She bemoaned the day she had ever switched her tail at flies, for flies weren't queer like skyscrapers, and she could swish her tail at flies. Skyscrapers didn't notice her tail!

After they had adventured all evening the Knight brought them back and they left their friends and Dreamland. But ever after it seemed to the boy and the girl that the animals who had gone adventuring had somewhat lost their heads over all the traveling for often they saw a certain look in the green eyes of the cat and the soft mild eyes of the cow, which showed they were dreaming of things above a milk saucer and a milk stool!

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

AMBER

OF THE many mystic qualities which were formerly supposed to pertain to amber its potency as a charm against rheumatism appears to be about the only one which survives in popular superstition. But a belief in this quality persists with remarkable vitality and is defended by persons whom one would least suspect of such credulity. Henry Ward Beecher always carried about with him a string of amber beads to cure or to ward off his rheumatic attacks; and amber set as jewelry is still sold in London for the cure of this malady. Only a few years ago amber had a much more prominent place in therapeutics. In 1865 Rev. C. W. King, in his "Natural History of Precious Stones" wrote: "That the wearing of an amber necklace will keep off an attack of erysipelas has been proved by experiments beyond the possibility of a doubt." Oil of amber still has a place in the United States dispensatory and perhaps there still exist some old-time doctors who use it medicinally.

The ancients, who attached mystic qualities to all sorts of precious and semi-precious stones, were not likely to neglect amber; that strange substance born of the sea and of the color of yellow sunlight. The Romans used to place in their mortuary urns pieces of amber and jet, the jet symbolizing the darkness of death and the amber the light of immortality. Possibly the black stone was an offering to Pluto and the yellow substance an offering to the sun-god. In the medicine of the Middle ages, which was largely folk-medicine, amber played an important part, and, as has been said, has continued to play a medicinal role down to our own times. The reverance with which the ancients regarded amber was increased by the discovery of its electrical properties. Doctor Kunz says: "The electric property of amber was remarked as early as 600 B. C. by the Ionic philosopher, Thales, and from this observation may be dated the study of electric phenomena."

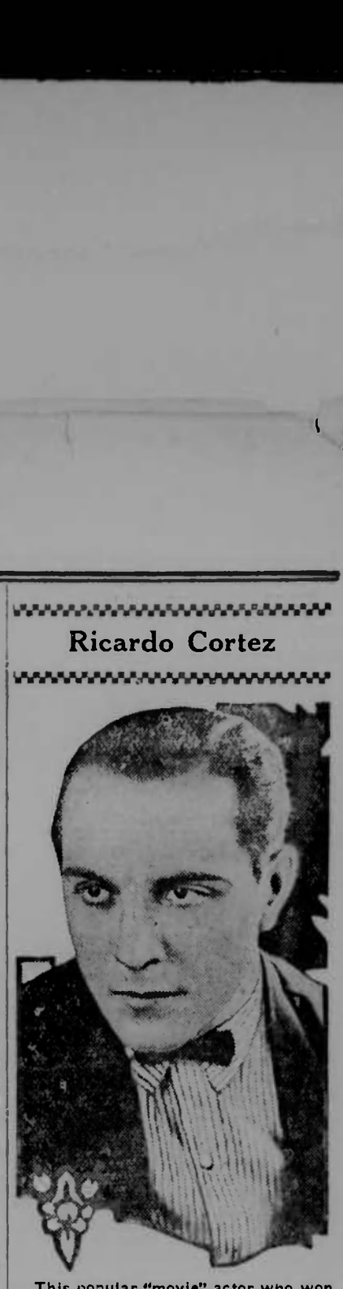
WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

AT 21—Brander Matthews Had His Manuscripts Rejected With Unfailing Regularity.

"I WAS only two months more than twenty-one when my two years' attendance at Columbia Law school ended at last. I managed somehow to answer the questions put to me. After I passed the examination, and before the commencement at which I was to receive my degree I married and left almost immediately for a honeymoon in Europe.

"While I was still at law school my contributions to the magazines were rejected with exemplary speed. In 'The Critic' Sheridan tells us that 'When they do agree on the stage their unanimity is wonderful,' and equally wonderful to me was the unanimity of editors. No matter how laboriously I might feather my essays they were homing pigeons; and I could always count on another swift return. With the modest confidence of youth I was but little discouraged; and while one article was vainly paying its round of visits I was already engaged upon another.—Brander Matthews."



TODAY—The receipt of a Brander Matthews in an editorial office is hailed with respect and pleasure and a check is made out even before it is read, for Mr. Matthews is among the most famous of all American critics and writers on the theater, besides being a notable figure in the other branches of literature. Perhaps it might be said that Matthews is the George Brandes of this country, a comparison with which even his name is in harmony.

WHAT THE GRACIOUS HOSTESS SAYS:

By DELLA THOMPSON LUDES

A BREAKFAST PARTY

ANY meal that is served before one o'clock is a breakfast. After that it is called luncheon. There is a fashion now in some tearooms and coffee shops of calling the meal served from ten o'clock to noon, "brunch" or "brekko-lunch"—a combination of breakfast and lunch.

The cloth for the breakfast or "brunch" party may be as gay as you like. Colored linens made into runners and embroidered, or not; place mats of Indian head or the ever-fast textiles; ecru art crash in cross-stitch embroidery; old-fashioned yellow and white or blue and white tablecloths cut over into breakfast cloth, runners, or mats and napkins; pale yellow oilcloth decorated with stencil painting; unbleached muslin with applique design or border of cretonne—there are any number of fascinating cloths with which to dress the table. The long white dinner cloth, however, has no place on the breakfast table. If the refectory table is used, it should be left bare, with, possibly, place mats or doilies of coarse linen. The refectory table (long and narrow and very simple of line) is an innovation in the American home, but is rapidly coming into popular usage. Its covering—open, showing the wood of the table.

The decorations should be simple, with a blue cloth; lilies of the valley with runners of green checked gingham, pussy-willows with runners of orchid; a brown basket of fruit with a cloth of unbleached muslin or heavy ecru linen appliqued in fruit design; a high glass compote overflowing with grapes on a blue-and-white or yellow cloth; or a glass basket in the center, with smaller glass baskets (all alike) at each of the four corners. Baskets of Dresden are also lovely, and the grass and reed baskets that some of us are sufficiently accomplished to make ourselves, make very charming decorations when filled with flowers, fruit or candy.

If baskets, compotiers or other ornamental holders are used, however, they must be all alike.

If the table is small or narrow it is not best to use too many decorative articles, but where it is large, additional flower holders, bowls, compotiers or figures may be used. You must, however, guard against getting too many different kinds of decorative articles on the table. For instance, you might use an old-fashioned high-standard compotier or "sauce-dish" of pressed glass—such as belonged to your grandmother—for a centerpiece. With this you could use four small silver or glass baskets or compotiers, or four colored bird-figures at the corners of the table for candy, but these four must be all alike. Your table would look like the glass counter in a department store if each of the four baskets was different.

History of Poplin

Poplin came from Avignon, and the reason for its name is not immediately apparent until we remember that, until 1791, Avignon was a papal town, and therefore the silk manufactured there was called by the Italians papalino, and by the French papelin, so that when it was introduced into England in 1693 by the Huguenot refugees it automatically became poplin.

Today, most poplins are of worsted and flax or wool and cotton, and those of Irish manufacture are deservedly popular. Readers of Jane Austin will recall the delightful confession in "Emma": "I have some notion of putting such a trimming as this to my white and silver poplin."—Exchange.

WIFEHOOD IS A HAZARD

Says a Writer and The Woman Who Marries Risks All On Her Husband.

The business of wifehood, were Lloyd's to consider it an insurable proposition, would undoubtedly be listed among "the hazardous risks." Why? Because the chances are so small of bringing it to a successful conclusion.

Take my 21-year-old daughter, for instance. How can she know whether the boy in whom she would invest her youth, her energies and abilities will be able in twenty or thirty years' time to pay her any dividends on them? She cannot.

When a man is 24 or less and good-looking, nerve so often seems energy; self-confidence, hustle and solemnity pass for depth. He may look a good investment even to shrewder eyes and yet turn out the poorest.

She, like her mother and every other woman, must make her investment on faith. And what business man in the world wants to make an investment on faith alone?

Bankruptcy For Wives.

And even if she be a discerning young woman and invests herself in the most able and energetic of husbands, how many things there are that can happen to husbands which will bring this business of wifehood to bankruptcy!

First of all, there is his death. Suppose for fifty years she gives her whole energy and thought to promoting her husband, and then that he dies? Unless he leaves her an estate on which the interest is equal to his income when alive, she suffers a real financial loss.

The wife is responsible for all social activities of her family, although she is expected to call and receive calls, entertain and be entertained, her place in the social structure is fixed, not by any ability of her own to give pleasure in her companionship, but by her husband's ability to pay; not by her own charm and appearance, but by his position. That, too, illustrates the hazards of wifehood, writes Emily Newel Blair in the Baltimore Sun.

In Washington, for instance, where one's place in the social scale is indicated by the rule of precedure, doesn't a stupid and slovenly wife of a senator outrank the most charming wife of a mere attache or commissioner? Just as whenever committees are appointed for public work the wives of men who have succeeded, no matter how stupid they may be, are placed ahead of the able women whose husbands happens to be less known.

Wife a Help.

No one denies that a frugal and thrifty wife may make "a poor sticker" more successful than he otherwise would be, or that an able, gracious wife increases the brilliancy of her husband's career.

I've known women who managed to wring from the poorest investment some return, and other women who got the maximum out of their good ones; but the fact is that a wife's profit depends far more on the husband in which she invests her qualities than on what those qualities are.

At about this place or before, some man will arise and say, "Why all this bother about wifehood? Women know they take risks. They know they must rise or fall by their husbands' worldly success, but I opine they'll keep on entering matrimony. They always have and they always will. Isn't there something else to be said for marriage beside its financial returns?"

Marriage Not Business

By all means. At least from the wife's point of view. So much, in fact, that books have been and will continue to be written on the subject. But I am not discussing the institution of marriage. It is not treated as a mere business, either for husbands or wives. With wifehood it is different.

What is this business of wifehood, anyway? What does it deal in? The comfort of a husband? But some husbands pay big prices for discomfort. Service? But idle wives cost more than busy ones.

Love? But one gets more of that sometimes from a fiance than from a wife. Housekeeping? But the home has often been run by sisters more profitably than by wives.

Or does it deal in imponderables? Does the husband expect faith, loyalty, dependence and feeding of the husband ego. Does wifehood supply him someone to work for, an end in life? That, I feel sure, many husbands would say it did.

But I look about once more: Are wives who supply these things the most generously rewarded? Are they the ones who receive the most for their wares? Does the amount given affect the profit? Decidedly no.

Men Lavish Devotion.

To give that answer you have only to look about you and note the devotion lavished on the selfish, faithless wives, or the pride and pleasure taken in the self-supporting wives or the luxuries provided for the irritable, domineering wives.

Of one thing we may be sure—whatever wifehood is, women will continue to enter it. Never worry about that, husbands!

A relationship of mutual give and take, bringing pain or joy—an education, an initiation—an occupation, a privilege—a vocation, and avocation—one thing to one woman, another, perhaps, to another, sometimes profitable, sometimes a martyrdom, but always an experience, and to most women worth paying for if need be. But her business? Why not be frank about it, husbands.

RANDALL, THE OLD GROUCH

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

"OLD GROUCH," as Randall, the treasurer, was called, was the hardest member of the corporation. This much was universally admitted. Nobody ever went to him for a raise of salary without a sinking heart, for, even if the request was overwhelmingly justified, the petitioner was met with a cutting phrase which nullified the moral effects of the benefit. Whatever Randall did was done grudgingly.

Yet the few who were in the know were aware how deeply the acid of life had eaten into Randall's soul. His only daughter had died, five years before, just after graduating from Vassar. His only son had gone to the bad and run away from home prior to that. Once the boy had come to the father's door; but Randall had sent out a curt message by the servant that he would not see him.

Of late Randall had been conscious that he was growing old. He had wondered whether he might not have dealt with the lad more kindly. He had heard nothing of Horace since that visit, which had been shortly after his daughter's death. His wife had died years before; he was alone in the world, and his embitterment made it a gloomy one.

He was working at the office late that night, for the spring rush of business had started; then the department managers were overworked, and Randall had to check up their errors, which were numerous and annoying. Having to consult the books, he rose from his desk and went into the large bookkeepers' room. A man was leaning over a broom, his eyes closed, supporting himself against the wall. It was the night watchman.

Randall went up and bellowed in his ear. Kimball started and looked at him vaguely. He had been nine months in the corporation's employment, but that did not assuage Randall's anger.

"You're a fine watchman!" bellowed the treasurer. "You can get your money in the morning!"

"Mr. Randall—" the man began to stammer.

"Not a word, now. Think we hired you to sleep here, I suppose?"

He left the discomforted man and walked back to his desk, growling. One could trust nobody. Thieves might enter while Kimball was sleeping. He forgot all about the books.

To Randall's indignation and astonishment his seat was no longer empty. A tiny, neat little girl, with flaxen curls that hung about her shoulders, was seated in his chair, scribbling all over his blotting pad. Anger rendered Randall mute.

Then the little girl looked up and smiled at him. Something in Randall's heart seemed to rise up and fill his throat. Minnie had smiled like that—and this child looked like Minnie.

"Well! Who are you?" demanded Randall gruffly.

"I'm Leonora, and I'm not a bit afraid of you," answered the child.

"How did you get here? Kimball brought you, eh?"

The child nodded. "He often brings me, only he tells me not to let you see me, because you're an old grouch. I wanted to see what an old grouch was like, so I came here. Are you really an old grouch? You don't look awfully bad."

"I guess I'm an old grouch, all right," said Randall.

"But you can't make me afraid of you," said the child. "People say you're terrible. Papa says so."

"I guess I am. Somebody's got to be."

"I'd hate to be you," said Leonora.

Randall glared at her. At first he could not find words to say. He was thinking that he hated to be himself. At last he found his tongue. "Kimball!" he bellowed.

The watchman appeared. He stood looking in dismay, first at the child and then at the treasurer.

"Got any good reason for being asleep on duty?" Randall inquired.

The watchman's face flushed heavily. "I was up all last night with my sister's husband," he answered. "That's his child."

Randall began to notice that Kimball had the speech of an educated man. Strange that he had not noticed it in those nine months!

"He's getting over an attack of pneumonia," continued Kimball.

"What does he do for a living?" asked Randall; and yet he could not imagine why he was interested.

"Well, sir, like me, he was brought up in a rich home, and we were both wasters in our youth. I couldn't turn my hand to anything, and he's the same. I guess we're both sorry now. He was watchman with Wiley company till it dissolved."

"Yes, I know," Randall sneered. "Both born to better things and can't hold down a watchman's job. Here—take yourself off and take the child with you!"

They went away, the little girl shaking her hand at him and laughing. Randall, when they were gone, sat at his desk thinking. His life was passing in review before him, the empty years, the thankless years. What if he had dealt harshly with the boy?

He cursed himself for a sentimentalist. Why should these thoughts come to him now? And yet—well, he might give Kimball another chance. He might do that. He would give him that vacancy in the clerical department—and the girl! It was odd how she reminded him of Minnie. His daughter had looked just like that when she was a child.

He rose and went home, frowning, and anyone who had met him on the road would have thought he was the surliest looking man that he had encountered in many a day. But once in his room the old man paced the floor, shaking his head and conscious of the same sense of uselessness.

He could not sleep. The child was before his eyes all night. Minnie! What would he not have given to have had those years again, when Minnie was a baby?

"Old Grouch" was at his worst next day. He refused three applications for increase of salary, scolded the department managers roundly, and made himself even more feared than usual. But at night, when the force had gone, he crept quietly out of the office, after ascertaining the night watchman's address.

He, "Old Grouch" was going to tell the man that he could come to work at eight, as usual. Poor devil of a watchman! He was not so much to blame, if his story was true!

The address was a poor street off Third avenue. Randall gazed around him in disgust as he passed through the slum. A bewildered man was clinging to a post. Two shrews were scolding each other from different doorways. What a place in which to bring up a child! Suppose it had been Minnie!

At a few minutes after seven he stood before a door in a tenement building. He rang, and a tired-looking woman opened to him. The woman was unmistakably the mother of the girl. And, weary as she was, and poorly dressed, she was unmistakably a lady.

"Good evening, Mrs. Kimball," said Randall roughly. "I'm Mr. Randall, and I've called to say that your husband can have his job back."

The woman stared at him in terror. "I'm— I'm not Mrs. Kimball," she stammered, and ran back into the apartment. Randall heard her sobbing as she ran.

Then he was aware of a tiny figure at his side, and the little girl was looking up into his face.

"Old Grouch!" she lisped. "Old Grouch, come and see papa!"

It was strange that the child's touch turned his will to water. Randall suffered her to lead him by the hand.

He went into a dark passage and halted at the door of a tiny room. It was almost dark inside, but he heard the woman sobbing at the side of the man who lay there. She rose and turned and faced him.

"I am your son's wife," she said with simple dignity.

And in the dark Randall, incredulous, saw the figure upon the bed.

"I guess it was a mistake," the woman continued. "This is my little girl, and Mr. Kimball has been taking her to the office nights while my husband was ill. You didn't know, and—there is no need to stay, Mr. Randall."

Randall struck a match with trembling fingers and looked at the man on the bed. He saw the fever-flushed face of his own son, whom he had thought gone forever. And then the man's will broke. "Old Grouch" kneeled down at his side.

"Horace!" he whispered, taking his hand in his. "Horace, you will come home! I have come to take you home—you and your wife, and—and Leonora. I have wanted you—heaven knows how much," he continued. "Only I didn't know it."

The woman turned away her face. "Not now," she answered. "We do not want your forgiveness after these years."

Randall looked at his son. "Horace?" he asked.

But the sick man turned his face away and answered nothing. And then Randall felt a little hand slipped into his own.

"I'll go with you, Old Grouch!" said Leonora.

And suddenly the waters of pity gushed from the man's eyes. "God forgive me!" he cried, catching her to his breast.

In a trice the mother was sobbing in his arms. And the three, by the sick man's bed, the son and father clasping each other's hands, was the sight that met Kimball's eyes as he entered.

"Old Grouch" broke the silence.

"Get to your job, Kimball!" he bellowed. "Tomorrow I'll have something to say to you. Get to work now, or I'll—I'll discharge you!"

For he meant to keep up his reputation to the last.

Time in Ruthenes

In all the towns and villages in the distant country where the Ruthenes live one may find clock towers ever in view and inspection shows no two of the clocks indicate the same time, each clock, apparently, running very much on its own time. But that fact has no importance to the Ruthenes, who insist the scriptural injunction still remains in force, "Ye know not the day nor the hour." So they put clocks in place largely as a matter of decoration and custom, then pay no attention to them.—Ohio State Journal.

Cat's Eyes Tell Time

The Abbe Huc, one of the first Europeans to explore China and Thibet, maintains that the Chinese can tell approximate time by looking at a cat's eyes. He explains that as the noon hour approaches the cat's pupils are drawn more perpendicular, dilating gradually as the afternoon wears on.

Ben and His Book-Wagon

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

BEN WATERS had gone almost into bankruptcy in his first business venture—a book shop on a fashionable street in Boston.

Fortunately he had seen the handwriting on the wall in time to read it and retire while he could still hold on to precious books. He had lost all his money, a lot of faith in his own judgment, most of his patience with what he had formerly idealized as the cream of Boston intelligencia, but—he possessed many fine editions of rare books, autographed copies, specially bound volumes, a unique collection of works that might serve him in good stead some day.

He secured a job in a bookshop in a railway terminal in New York, where he did not expect anything of the clients who might come and go and where he operated, on the side, a circulating library of some activity.

"There is more appreciation of books in the minds of the people who come in here with not more than a quarter to spend on a loaned volume than I found in all my experience in effete Boston," he said bitterly, to Horace, a colleague and a man who was becoming his friend.

Summer approached and Ben chafed under the confinement. The terminal bookshop was open evenings as well as all day and his hours very long.

One night as he walked down toward Greenwich village, where he had a cubicle in which to sleep, he had an inspiration. Why could he not take his precious books and, with the co-operation of some firm of progressive publishers, combine his wares with theirs, and his work and experience with their investment and go a-caravaning for the summer? To live among his books, to sleep at night in the silent places, to travel the dusty country roads and commune with country folk—that would be a delightful life, thought Ben.

It took him some time to convince a house of book publishers that this would pay, not only on the immediate investment but as a permanent advertisement for their books and periodicals. But he had a charming personality, a persuasive manner when he was thoroughly in earnest, and, almost as a dream coming true, he found himself the keeper of the book caravan. He had a well-stocked set of shelves, a hundred books for circulation on his journey, a portable home and bookshop combined.

Thoughts of a girl he had fallen in love with while visiting a college friend in Brattleboro, Vt., took him, one night, to a camp just outside the town on a lovely brook—Broad brook, as he remembered the name. He drew his motor up under a group of fragrant, age-old pine trees and there he pitched his camp. His book business had progressed, and not only had he sold many volumes and taken orders for more, but he had left, through his circulating system, many others that were to be called for on his return trip.

From the region of Brattleboro he took daily trips to the camps in the neighborhood. Always, like a fragrant scent pursuing him, came to him the memory of this girl he had always since thought of as his Dream Girl. He knew her name, but further than that he had heard nothing of her since his college days.

Occasionally, at noon, when he stopped his book wagon at a country place, he was invited to eat the midday meal with the family. And such meals! And such a wealth of philosophy as he found among the great souls who had been reared and were still living in the wonderful hills of Vermont.

"Couldn't you come back to spend Sunday with us?" asked a woman who had been more than glad to have him to dinner. "Ethel, my daughter, will be home and she loves books—and folks like you."

Ben accepted the invitation and recalled with a quickly beating pulse that Ethel had been the name of his Dream Girl. Could it, would it, be she? If not, why was he to be haunted by the memory of her sweetness? Why had he been led into the depths of this country but for a romantic purpose?

On Sunday when his motor caravan chug-chugged up to the white gate Ethel was the first person he saw in the old-fashioned garden beside the porch.

When she saw him she knew it was the same Ben of her 'teen days.

The spaces in their minds where they found a common meeting ground were numberless and Ethel's mother invited Ben to spend the night with them.

"No—I'll come to breakfast with you, if I may," he said, "but tonight—this night of nights—I must spend out under the stars to give my thanks for what has happened to me."

The mother understood. She also began to be consoled for the realization that her daughter had never found a man she cared for but had kept on teaching in Brattleboro. She had carried the ideal of a girlhood lover in her heart so that none other might enter.

"And you will marry me, Ethel?" Ben begged the girl the last night before leaving to retrace the trail back to the publishers who had lost faith in him.

"Of course, Ben—I've always said you would find me," she said shyly.

GRANTSVILLE.

The body of George Washington Durst was found in the barn of C. A. Beachy on Negro Mountani Tuesday afternoon. The discovery was made by Mr. Beachy. Mr. Durst was aged 69 years and had been working for Daniel Gingerick, near Mr. Beachy's farm, but had spent Monday night and Tuesday at Mr. Beachy's. He had gone to the barn to feed the horses and was followed shortly afterward by Mr. Beachy, who called him but receiving no reply instituted a search, his body being found in the stable, the cause of his death being appoplexy. His remains were moved from the barn to Mr. Beachy's home and kept there until the funeral,which was held from the English Lutheran church at Accident on Frdiay morning, with interment in the church cemetery. Mr. Durst is survived by two sons and three daughters. One brother, Eli Durst, of Negro Mountain, also survives.

The women's Community Club meeting, held Wednesday afternoon at the home of Miss Christena Winterberg, was largely attended, regardless of the very stormy day. After the regular business meeting, conducted by Miss Mollie Dorsey, the ladies cut and sewed a number of garments which will be given to the needy in the surrounding community. A motion was made and carried to change the date of election of officers from May to January, but the election of officers will be held at the February meeting this year. At that time the program for the year will be completed.

The following pupils of the Turner school had perfect attendance for December: Albert and Byard Newman, Carl Hutzel, Ora Warner and Laura Turner. Those who have a perfect attendance for the first four months and who will receive perfect attendance badges from Miss Broaditch, instructor, are: C. Hutzel, Annie Merbach, Albert and Byard Newman.

A very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Miss June Beachy last Wednesday when she entertained the following guests: Ethel Bittinger, Mary Bevans, Dorothy Edwards, Naomi Stanton, Mildred Michael, Cleta Folk, Marion Wisseman, Evelyn and Pearl Beachy, Luthern Miller, Wm. Bevans, Paul Livengood, Julius Michael, Vernon and John Beachy. Music and games were played and refreshments were served.

Mrs. George Diefenbach and Mrs. Harold Miller jointly entertained the Lutheran Missionary Society at Mrs. Diefenbach's home Tuesday afternoon. The topic, "Another Year is Dawning," was ably discussed by Mrs. F. C. Diehl. There were twenty-four members present and four visitors, the latter being Rev. Sigler, Mrs. Anna Bittinger, Mrs. Albert Swauger and Mrs. J. A. Barr. At the close of the meeting a luncheon was served.

Miss Nellie Glotfelty, who has been employed in the general store of Gilead Broadwater & Son the past year, has resigned and has enrolled as a student at Catherman's Business College in Cumberland.

Emmons Warnick has been employed as clerk in the J. J. Bender store.

ACCIDENT.

Mr. F. V. McGettigan and family were Sunday guests of Mr. Jefferson Diehl.

Misses Gladys Hetrick and Ruth Ault spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Smith Friend.

Misses Kathryn Speicher and Oma Friend, who are attending the State Normal school at Frostburg, spent the week-end at their homes here.

Mr. Ross Speicher, who is employed in Cumberland, spent Sunday at his home here.

We were quite interested in hearing of the delightful tour which Mr. William Tarbell and John Speicher took during the Christmas holidays. They were traveling in the Sunny South where there was no snow or ice and where all was pleasant during the holiday season and everything helped in the having of a pleasant vacation. Report has it that some others made the trip with them, but you will have to ask the gentlemen about that for yourselves.

"The Cat and The Canary."

"The Cat and the Canary," the famous New York and Chicago success, that the Paramount Producing Co. presents at the Maryland Theatre, Oakland, Wednesday, January 19, is a melodrama replete with mystery that begins almost immediately after the rise of the curtain and remains unsolved until the very last minute of the play. The story revolves about the strange events that follow the reading of the will of a rich and eccentric old man. It begins in the library of his mansion on the Hudson, continues with increasing dramatic tenseness in the room in which he had died twenty years before the action of the play, and reaches a happy though exciting climax in the library.

The action all takes place between 11 p. m. and 1 a. m., but at that time a murder is done, a necklace worth a fortune is taken from the neck of a [illegible] and then [illegible] ing rapidity. Throughout all this mystery there is woven a delightful love story and many humorous situations to relieve the tenseness of the exciting plot.

"The Cat and the Canary" had a two-season run in New York and one of a season in Chicago, while other companies were playing it in Australia and the Orient.—Advertisement 1t

KEEPING OUR COLDS CONFINED TO OURSELVES

Hand-Shaking Frowned Down Upon by Health Department

The Chinese style of handshaking is recommended by the Health Gnome who is unofficially connected with the State Department of Health, as one way of preventing the spread of the common cold from friend to friend.

On his return from a long journey, out to China and back, the Health Gnome was sorry to find most of his friends suffering from the usual mid-winter sore throat or cold, sneezing, snuffling and coughing. Perched on his favorite corner of the Director's desk, he said that on his travels he had heard about some people at the University of British Columbia who have been studying these things under the microscope and who have found out that children and grown-ups conduct a regular germ exchange when they shake hands.

"I wish," he continued, "that I could show you a picture of the way my little Chinese friend, Poliang, shakes hands with himself in the most correct Chinese fashion, and that I could introduce the custom in this country. I am sure it would help to prevent some of the colds that are so prevalent at this time of the year."

To show how it is done, the Health Gnome stood up on the desk, clasped his own little hands in a warm grip and made a polite little bow. "That is all there is to it," he said as he sat down, "but if we could start the fashion, I feel certain that we would hear of fewer colds. And we could not have a better time to start it than just at this season, when handshaking is so general, when everybody is saying 'How do you do' and I wish you a Happy New Year'.

He wrinkled his brows and was lost in thought for a minute or two, then he said: "Of course it takes a long time to change an old custom, so we'd better send out a reminder of some other ways of keeping our colds to ourselves. One of them is to cut out all kissing—you ought never kiss anybody on the mouth, at any rate, and it is a regular crime to kiss a baby on the mouth at any time. Then you can never go amiss when you remember that 'if you have to cough or sneeze, you must do it behind your handkerchief, please.'" With a flourish of his little green cap and "A Healthy New Year to everybody", he was gone again.

Gone But Not Forgotten.

In memory of our dear husband and father, John E. Paugh, who departed this life one year ago today, January 12, 1926:

Dearest husband and father, how we miss you
From this world so dark and cold,
But we know you are abiding
Safe within the gates of gold,

We will miss that loving handclasp
Which you did so freely give;
And the good advice you gave us:
Look to Jesus now and live.

We can hear you sweetly singing
Safely on the other shore—
Singing to your wife and daughter;
Soon we'll meet to part no more.

You have wrought a faithful mission
And your deeds will live behind;
But your absence brings much sorrow,
Oh! such sorrow to the mind.

Watch our coming, O beloved one;
We shall meet some sweet day,
When the Saviour bids our coming
To the realms of endless day.

Do we meet to part? No never—
It will be a glorious dawn,
And we'll join those gone before us,
On the resurrection morn.

HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

We have only memory, dear father,
To remember our whole life thru.
But the memory will linger forever,
As we treasure the image of you.

HIS ONLY DAUGHTER.

Musical Prodigy Goes a-Visiting

George Hoover, of Garrett county, Md., while passing through town enroute to his home made a short stop at the office of the Salisbury Auto Company. Mr. Hoover had with him his little grandson, Kenneth Wilburn, aged five years, who is a veritable musical prodigy. The little fellow is a very expert harmonica or mouth-organ player, and can promptly reproduce on his harmonica almost any tune he hears sung, whistled or played on any kind of an instrument. Wherever he goes he has his instrument with him, and while here on Tuesday he gave a demonstration to the writer and a few other persons of his skill as a musician. The boy is truly a wonder in his line for one so young, and he showed rare musical talent almost from the time he was able to walk.—Meyersdale Republican.

RITCHIE'S INAUGURATION WAS A VERY TAME AFFAIR

Participated in Largely By East Baltimoreans and Political Job Hunters From The City

(Paul Winchester in The Marylander)

Annapolis, Jan. 18—The inception of the Governor's third term, unprecedented as it was, took place on Wednesday of last week, and there was nothing in the manner of the inauguration, except the missing of the old Marylanders who usually turned out in large numbers to witness such an affair.

The Governor and his lovely, handsome mother, Speaker Lee and a few others were the only members of the old aristocratic families present.

His Excellency has to thank for his reception the subordinate politicians, who made up a large part of the gathering, and also City Councilman Klecka, Senator Ambrose Kennedy, Sheriff Potee, Congressman-elect Palmisano and the women, who made the day of it at the State Capitol. They arrived in large busses singing and doing whatever they thought best to attract attention, and they helped swell the crowd. The greater part of the throng was made up of residents of the Democratic stronghold in East Baltimore, and they made the inauguration a great success.

Those who managed the affair were seeond raters at the business, for outside of the Governor taking his oath and delivering his address, there was nothing imposing about the function. Here was a man being sworn into offiee for the third consecutive time, an unheard of, even an unthinkable event, before the day of Ritchie, and those making the arrangements made little of it! They knew that he has been talked of from one end of the land to the other as a possible Presidential nominee in the coming Democratic National Convention, and that a large and entirely new arrangement ould gain for him nation-wide publicity, but they did not know how to put it over, and the advice of those present who have been schooled in the political field of experience was ignored, so they sat tight and observed the childish way, what should have been a grand event, was handled.

The best advice to the Governor, whether he wants it or not, is to leave those who arranged matters for the momentous beginning of his third term at home when he goes to the next Democratic convention, or he will probably get just about as far this time as he did in New York two years and a half ago.

And let me impress this, for it is an outstanding fact, that had not "Gus" Klecka of the Seventh Ward, Senator Kennedy of the second legislative district, and the Hendricks Democratic Club, the "Sheriff's Brigade," Congressman Palmisano's delegation and the residents of Annapolis, who are always on hand, and who mostly attended because of the fine music furnished by the Naval Academy Band, there would nave been one of the smallest crowds on record to attend an outstanding affair. And to them the Governor is largely indebted for his uneventful third inaugural. It should have been an imposing function, but it was not.

Speaker Lee is having all kinds of difficulties over making up his committees, and his unwise manner of delaying the appointments is causing him even more trouble and criticism as the time goes on. Many of his friends, who have also enjoyed the friendship of his honored father, are expressing their fear that the son will find his way upstairs paved with broken glass, tacks and banana peels four years hence if he continues his present manner of disappointing his admirers. It is too early in the game to say whether or not the speaker will be able to wield much influence over the members of the House, and from what can be learned from those occupying seats, which is about all most of them are doing, things will not be so rosy as the path turns toward the end of the session.

One thing can be said for the Speaker at this time, and that is that he begins his sessions at the hour named, and not several minutes later, but that cannot be said of the President of the Senate, who up to this time has kept his Senators waiting, and they are not at all pleased with it and hope to correct it before long. They are mostly business men and are not used to sitting around waiting to go to work.

The Collar which is usually placed around the delegate's neck early in most sessions, has not shown plainly yet in either chamber and it is thought before long that the members will be quoting Andy Gump: "I wear no man's collar." Some of them are doing it now.

At the outstart it was to be all harmony, but the waters have roughened to a great extent, and small white caps are seen in the distance.

From what little business that has been transacted in the three days sessions held, no one has been able to draw any conclusions as to the ability of the new delegates and senators. However, the majority floor leader, James Lindsay, of Baltimore county, whose father was a member of the House forty-one years ago, later State Senator, who, like his father at this early stage of the session, has made many friends. He is known to most all the members of the Assembly, including the Senators, as "Jim." Most of them are still shy, and at times have a doubt as to whether they are here regarding legislative matters or for some other purpose. However, they are polite and courteous gentlemen, and the outstanding member of the Upper House, so far as appearance and dignity go, is Senator McCardell, of Frederick county. He looks the part and adds to the dignity of the body. But in the House at this time "Jim" is the centre of the stage. He has been to Annapolis before, knows the ropes and the sleepy looking characters who frequent the corridors as well. The administration's best move since organizing the House was the making Mr. Lindsay floor leader.

The membership of the House is made up of all sorts and conditions of men.

The county members are mostly interested in farming—there are a few lawyers among them, also bankers, oystermen, all of them, however being interested in the farm.

Baltimore City has a variety in the way of "talent!" For instance there are ten members of the bar, four who have their own places of busines, two druggists, two B. & O. R. R. clerks, a stove man, a penciler, a malt salesman, a painter, a packer, a dry goods merchant, an eye specialist, several interior decorators—and, to be sure, among them is a gentleman of leisure who you will read about in due time—and the fellow who always gets there last to finish up the job is also on hand—that is the undertaker.

The dominating force in the organization of both Houses of the General Assembly was Frank Kelly. He named the committees of both Senate and House—he selected the Chairmen of all the important ones, and in several instances forced changes, where selections had been made by the presiding officers. The committees are Kelly committees, and the leaders of the old organization in days gone by, even Mr. Rasin in his palmiest days, never controlled the make-up of the organizationa as has been done by Mr. Kelly the past week. His word has been law at the State House; he has selected not only the committees but he has made choice of most of the subordinate employes, especially those from the City. He not only has done all this but he forced through the extension of Judge Stump's term and has been the dominating figure there up to the present time—all the other leaders, not even excepting the highest officers of the State, have been playing second fiddle to Frank. And those who have been seeking jobs and the statesmen who have been meekly begging exalted places on important committees, have been obliged to wait on Frank, and he has had all the responsibility on his hands.

Those who want anything at the State House the next three months, whether legislation or otherwise, will have to see this remarkable man. He certainly is boss.

—o—

The really dramatic feature of the political comedy which reached its culmination on Wednesday, was not evident to the public. It happened when Mr. Furst, in the plentitude of his power, jammed John M. Dennis, William S. Gordy and Thomas H. Robinson down the unwilling throat of the Governor, who writhed as he swallowed the dose, but whose writnings were not publicly visible, except to Mr. Furst and a few others.

—o—

And people have been saying that Frank Kelly is about done for, and the Baltimore Sun has been waiting in joyful expectation, to publish his political as well as his physical obituary, but as things are progressing now, tho indications are that before long Mr. Furst will be cramming the city boss down the throat of the Sun, as he has been obliged to do on several occasions during the past few years. Mr. Kelly is a most useful man, probably the most useful man for many purposes in the State at the present time, and he is a very dangerous man when he becomes really mad and starts out after those who stand in his way.

—o—

The wisdom of selecting as head of the most important committee a man from a black county, a county which gives Republican majorities for all but the one man, a county which is not able to add any strength to the dominant party, has become a joke. If this gentleman was of amazing superiority to all others, was a genius of some sort, there might be some excuse for such folly, but he has never shown any other superiority than his ability to secure an election to the Senate in what is probably the blackest of the Republican counties of the State. There are at least a dozen members of the Senate who are better fitted for the place of floor leaders than Mr. Mitchell, but he seems to have some hold which they cannot shake off, and gets the highest honor, which, by all sensible and wise business and political rules, should go to some one else.

MARRIED.

Mr. Jefferson L. Ralston announced on last Friday the marriage of his daughter, Miss Beulah Virginia Ralston, to Mr. Frank B. Yourison, Jr., the wedding having occurred on Wednesday, December 29th, 1926, at the First English Lutheran church in Wheeling, W. Va. Both the bride and bridegroom have been residents of Pittsburgh, Pa., for some years past, and in that city they will continue to reside.

Sellar—Wilson—Mr. and Mrs. Burt Wilson announce the marriage of their daughter Alice E. to Mr. Tim M. Sellar, on Thursday, December the second, Tavares, Florida.

The above clipping, taken from the Leesburg (Florida) Tribune of January 7th, was sent The Republican a few days ago. The Florida newspaper had the following concerning the marriage of the couple:

"The foregoing announcement is being received by friends of the two families. It comes as a surprise, the plans of the two young people having been kept a secret prior to their marriage, and since then only a few very close friends have known of the wedding. Mrs. Sellar is the daugter of Mr. and Mrs. Burt Wilson, of this city but has made her home in Tavares for two years, having been a clerk in the office of Judge E. M. Talley. She is a charming young woman who has endeared herself to many friends by her delightful personality. Mr. Sellar is formerly of Paris, Ill., and has resided here for the past year. He is a graduate of DePauw University and of Harvard and the Northwestern Universities in law. He is connected with the law firm of Gaines and Futch, and is the son of Mrs. Julia A. Sellar of this city and a brother of Mrs. George Erck, of Starke's Ferry."

Baby Clinic.

A baby clinic will be conducted on Wednesday, January 26th, at 10:00 a. m. in the County Health Nurse's office, third floor of the Court House. This clinic will be conducted by Dr. Charlotte Gardner, of Cumberland, and Miss Rhesa M. King, Garrett County Public Health Nurse.

All mothers are urged to bring their children to this clinic to be examined, weighed and measured. Any child under seven years of age will be examined free of charge.

Road From Tunnelton to Fellowsville Is Assured.

A survey has been completed and property owners interviewed between Tunnelton and Fellowsville, lying six miles south of the former place, for the building of the connecting link to the Northwestern Turnpike, which, if the road be built, and that is practically assured, will give a direct line through Tunnelton, Kingwood and Terra Alta to Oakland, thence to the National Road at Keyser's Ridge.

Sunnyside Grange Notes.

At our last regular meeting, held on January 12, we had a very interesting program. The recently appointed new county agent, Mr. McClone, was present and gave us a short talk, which was enjoyed by all. We hope he will come often and regularly.

Owing to the rain and muddy condition of the roads our December meeting was so poorly attended that officers for the present year were not chosen, but at the next meeting, on January 26th, we hope to hold the election, at which time all members are urged to be present and to take part in the deliberations of the meeting.

SECRETARY.

THREE COUNTIES TAKEN FROM STATE DRY UNIT

Garrett, Allegany and Washington Are Placed in Pittsburgh Unit by Federal Authorities

Maryland's three far western counties have been taken away from the State's Federal prohibition unit for purposes of enforcement and added to the West Virginia-Western Pennsylvania unit, it was announced Monday by Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in Charge of Prohibition Enforcement. The counties are Garrett, Allegany and Washington, which heretofore were part of the Baltimore area. The Washington permitting office will continue jurisdiction, however, it was announced.

The order became effective last Saturday.

Enforcement in these counties, according to information given out at the Treasury Department in Washington, will be under the direction of John B. Pennington, Administrator for the West Virginia-Western Pennsylvania unit, with headquarters at Pittsburgh. Officials said that the territorial shift was made largely because of geographical reasons, the counties falling more naturally into the territory of the Pittsburgh office. Changes in personnel, if any are made, will be handled by Mr. Pennington, it was said.

News of the proposed shift, altho it had been kept a secret in Washington, was not a surprise to the Baltimore and Maryland enforcement officers. In the absence of John F. J. Herbert, deputy prohibition administrator of the Baltimore office, who was said to be on an inspection tour in the Eastern Shore counties, none of the others in authority would discuss the matter, stated The Sun on Tuesday morning, but they admitted that they had expected the move.

Amos W. W. Woodcock, United State District Attorney in Baltimore, said the separation would not embarrass his office because the court would continue to sit at Cumberland to hear the cases as in the past. Washington county, which is the nearest county to Baltimore, and Garrett county, the most distant from Baltimore, have no United States Commissioners, but, Mr. Woodcock explained, cases originating in either of these counties are usually tried in the local courts under the county option law.

Persons arrested for violation of a Federal statute can demand, however, to be taken to the nearest United States Commissioner, he exalained. "In such a case, a man arrested in Hagerstown might decline to go to Cumberland for arraignment, and insist upon being taken to Baltimore. This is the only confusion, if it may be called such, that I can see in the new arrangement."

"A Peep Into the History of Garrett Lodge, K. of P."

Several Past Chancellors were present at the regular meeting of Garrett Lodge last Friday night, and each gave an excellent account of the activities and growth of the lodge during his respective administration.

The membership is showing an active interest in lodge affairs and in attendance. Every Friday evening brings with it an excellent program, well worthy the attention of every individual member of the organization.

The entertainment committee promises one of the best programs yet to be presented for tomorrow evening. "A peep into the history of Garrett Lodge" is the title given the program for this occasion, which, along with other numbers, promises to be just as represented by the committee having charge.

The attendance contest is proving to be successful and has created much enthusiasm. If you have not been attending regularly you are urged to do so. If your side should not win, you might be called upon to explain why. The "Bulls" are still ahead in the contest, but the "Bears" have ruffled their fur and are expected to stage an attack at any time. Come tomorrow (Friday) evening. Refreshments will be served.

PUBLICITY COMMITTEE.

Card of Thanks.

We, the mother, sisters and brothers of the late H. C. Hansen feel so very grateful for the many kind deeds and words of comfort from the people of Oakland that this is a feeble attempt to express our appreciation. From our hearts we thank you all.

THE FAMILY.

DIED.

MRS. NATHAN C. BROWNING

Mrs. Nathan C. Browning, aged 68 years, died at the home of her son, Gilbert Lowdermilk, a mile west of Oakland, Friday morning following a brief illness of pneumonia, and was buried at Sang Run Sunday after services conducted in the Methodist Episcopal church at that place. Mrs. Browning is survived by seven children by a former marriage to James Lowdermilk, whose death occurred a number of years ago, and by her husband, Nathan C. Browning, of Sang Run, Garrett county.

DENNIS LITZINGER.

Dennis Litzinger, third son of the late James M. Litzinger, former editor of the Oakland Democrat, died at his home in Grafton Saturday evening of typhoid fever. He was aged 35 years and is survived by his mother and one brother, Charles Litzinger, both of Grafton. Two other brothers, Harry and Joseph died three years ago and his father died two years ago following a heart attack.

HANS CHRISTIAN HANSEN

Hans Christian Hansen, aged 43 years, 5 months and 13 days, died suddenly at his home in Pittsburgh, Pa., Sunday evening, January 16th. He was the eldest son of a family of thirteen children, two of whom died in infancy. He was born in Onawa, Iowa, Aug. 3, 1883, and was united in marriage to Alma Lauretta Turney, December 8, 1914. To this union one son, John Marshall, now two years of age, was born. Mr. Hansen is survived by his wife and son, his mother and seven brothers and three sisters, together with many other relatives and a large circle of friends. At the age of 14 years Mr. Hansen became a confirmed member of the Danish Lutheran church, later transferring his church connection to St. Mark's Lutheran church in Oakland, thereafter transferring to St. John's Lutheran church at Swissvale, Pa., where he served as a member of the church council. He was also a member of the Masonic lodge at Dallas, S. D. During his lifetime Mr. Hansen was engaged in various occupations finally launching in the hardware business at Dallas, S. D. Upon disposing of his interests there he came to Oakland, where he was employed by C. N. McIntire, and upon leaving Oakland he went to Pittsburgh as manager of one of the three hardware stores of Scarborough & Klaus. Early in the fall Mr. Hansen suffered a heart attack, but apparently recovered his usual good health. Last Thursday he was taken ill with a severe cold. Sunday evening he appeared much improved, but a sudden and severe attack of the heart proved fatal in a few minutes. Mr. Hansen had many excellent friends in Oakland and his passing is sincerely regretted. He was a good citizen and a Christian gentleman.

The remains of the deceased were received in Oakland Tuesday afternoon, the funeral occurring from St. Mark's Lutheran church yesterday afternoon at two o'clock, the services being in charge of the pastor, Rev. C. A. Shilke, with interment in the Oakland cemetery. The pallbearers were Guy Yutzy, W. W. Dawson, Jesse J. Ashby, James G. Glotfelty, Jas. Fazzalari and Rev. H. E. Turney, while the flowerbearers were H. L. Jones, Paul Mitchell, Wellington Yutzy and D. S. Davis. Those attending the funeral from out of town were Mrs. John Hansen, Mrs. Clara Rounsberg and Oscar Hansen, of Onawa, Iowa; Axel Hansen, Omaha, Neb.; Fred and Roy Hansen, Tulsa, Oklahoma, and Rev. H. E. Turney, of Columbus, Indiana.

Results Of The Toxin-Antitoxin Clinics In Oakland.

The only way to be free of diphtheria is to see that all children of preschool age and school age have received the toxin-antitoxin or the prevenative for diphtheria.

In the past three weeks the people in Oakland have had this opportunity. The toxin-antitoxin has been given in the local schools. The parochial school was 100 per cent, every child therein receiving the treatment; the grammar school was 70 per cent, and 25 preschool children received it.

This treatment was given in the local schools by the local physicians, Drs. Henry McComas, M. C. Hinebaugh and N. I. Broadwater, with the assistance of the county health nurse, Miss Rhesa M. King. In the grammar school these workers were assisted by Mrs. Milton Sincell and Mrs. W. W. Grant, while in the parochial school the Sisters in charge very kindly assisted.

BIG GAIN NOTED IN RURAL HIGH SCHOOL ATTENDANCE

Both Enrollment and Pupils In School Nearly Tripled In Past Decade.

Approximately 20,000 pupils now are enrolled in the approved high schools of the counties of Maryland as compared with 7,000 ten years ago, according to a report made public a few days ago by the State Board of Education. In the period attendance has nearly tripled, mounting from 5,800 to 17,000. The increase in enrollment from 1925 to 1926 was 1,558 and in attendance 1,344, or a gain of eight per cent.

The establishment of additional high schools is, in part, responsible for the increase in enrollment and attendance, the report stated. In example, it was pointed out provision for public high schools in Southern Maryland, has been a development of the last few years. In 1920, there were in the State only eighty-two high schools for white pupils and four for colored which met the requirements for approval by the State Board of Education. At present there are 150 white and sixteen colored approved secondary schools, so that the increase in institutions has been sixty-eight for white and twelve for colored pupils.

Two White Schools Added In Year.

The fact that there were only two more high schools for white students last year than in 1925 indicates, it was said, that the number schools now established for whites is rapidly approaching the total needed in most of the counties.

New high schools were founded last year at Cumberland, Allegany county; West Friendship, Howard county; Bethesda, Montgomery county, and at Maryland Park, Prince George's county. High schools at Wolfeville, Frederick county, and Oxen Hill, in Prince George's county, were reestablished.

The ratio of the number of pupils attending high schools for white children in the counties to the combined enrollment of elementary and secondary schools is increasing steadily each year, according to the report. Of every 100 white pupils "belonging" to county schools, fifteen were in the high schools in 1926, while, in 1918, only seven of every 100 were found in the secondary institutions, it was explained.

Each year, it was pointed out, one more out of every one hundred white pupils in the counties goes on to the last four years of high school work. Last year's total of 17,516 white high school pupils is 15.1 per cent of the combined enrollment, an increase of .9 per cent over the ratio for 1925.

Eastern Shore Leads.

Eastern Shore parents seem more anxious to provide a high school education for their children than those of any other part of the State, the report asserts. In the table showing the per centage of pupils in each county enrolled in the white schools, Worcester county leads with 21.2 per cent. Talbot is second with 20.6 per cent, while Wicomico, with 19.6 per cent, Dorchester with 19.2 per cent, Somerset, 18.9 per cent; Carloine, 18.5 per cent; Kent, 18.3 per cent, and Queen Anne's, with 17.8 per cent, follow in the order named.

The largest increase in percentage, 3.1 per cent, over 1925 was registered in St. Mary's county.

Of the 166 white and colored high schools in the State, 128 offer four-year courses. Pupils taking courses in the schools which made only two or three years work, take the last one or two years of the course in the first group of schools. In 1920, only thirty-four schools for white pupils offered a full course, whereas the number for 1926 was 120.

Show At Maryland Last Night Pleases Large Audience.

Almost a full house at the Maryland Theatre last night was pleased with the presentation of "The Cat and Canary", a play in three acts which was presented by a troup of ten players. The play was of a mysterious nature, and caused a more or less uneasy sensation to the audience from the time the curtain raised in the first act until just a minute's time before it fell in the final act. The show proved to be as interesting as was represented in the advertisements by the management of the theatre.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 23, 1927.

PRAYER IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Mark 1:35; 14:32-36; Matt. 6:9-13.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—Matt. 7:7.

OUR PRAYING LORD.

Jesus prayed. After a particularly hard day about Capernaum, dawn found His room empty and the rocky silences were broken by His footfall as He sought among the hills opportunity to spend an hour alone with God. After an unusual experience, like the feeding of the 5,000 He went away and prayed until the morning watch. Before unusual experiences He prayed. He was praying at the baptism and saw heaven open. He was praying when the disciples saw His whole appearance altered into radiance upon Mount Hermon. He prayed all night under the stars, and when the crowd gathered He chose twelve. He prayed in Gethsemane and upon the cross. He prayed in the upper room and in the quiet company of His comrades. The habit of prayer is one of the most outstanding features of Jesus. Certainly if that is true, it should hold far more of a place than it does in our own lives that we feel too rushed with duties to turn aside for respite and a renewing of mental and spiritual energies. In the brief glimpses that the Gospels give us of Him, mere vignettes of passing impression upon the minds of observers, there are fifteen mentionings of His praying. There are hints of many more, for knowing this characteristic other lonely hours when circumstanees favored Him must have been filled with the same intensity of intercourse with His Father. And the prayer He taught to His diseiples is too smooth in its expressions, too comprehensive in its interests, to have been other than the phrases worn by constant use in His own speech with God.

Here then we begin to see dimly the reason for the difference in power between His life and our own. He dared not lose time from prayer; we dare not lose time in prayer. He worked much because He had power; we work much because we lack power. His work has been the wonder of the world; ours will be forgotten with our passing. Too busy to pray, we have busyness instead of power.

THE DESIRING DISCIPLES.

Jesus grew to be the hero of those out-door young fellows that we know as the Twelve. Whatever was a factor in His life became a concern of theirs, and they could not fail to observe the part prayer played in it. They noted the changes it wrought, as Dr. L. A. Banks did, in his mother, whose shining face on coming from her prayer-room during the most worrying experiences piqued his curiosity. Jesus might be dog-tired when He gave Himself to it, but seemed dynamic with energy when it was ended. Witness the Gethsemane garden in which He was seemingly drained of vitality, yet turned from prayer to greet the soldiers in such fashion that they were hurled to the ground by the spiritual impact. Shaken by the loss of the Baptist, the wearying day with the crowd and the fierce temptation to accept the crown as He was when He forced them to get into their boat as He went to prayer, they next saw Him march across the raging sea in sheer exultation. They had faced the jecring throng at their discomforture with the demonized boy. Immediately thereafter, Jesus took him and there was cure with utmost case. "Why couldn't we do it?" they demanded. "Prayer," was His only explanation. So in a thousand ways there was being impressed upon them how very vital a thing prayer was with Him, until at last they dropped all their old knowledge, all their old self-confidenee, and came to Him saying in effect, "We don't know anything about praying such as you do. You always get returns from it, while we do not. Lord, teach us to pray!" That was one of the high spots in the long training of this group and it must have been one of the most thrilling in all the experience of Jesus with them. That He was ready to answer may be seen in the form He gave that has spanned the centuries with it phrases, dead enough sometimes upon our lops though they are.

THE MODEL PRAYER.

It is not so much a form of words as a direction of attitudes. It was not to be "after this manner," not "use these words." We tend to make fetishes of forms. The seven sons of one Scleva, a Jew, found that the perfectly correct use of a form had anything but the desired effect when they escaped, beaten and dishelved, from the man they had sought to pacify with words. Forms are tools instead of mystic treasures. There must be skill in their using if there would be no peril in the result.

The first thing to note is the attitude toward God that is enjoined. "When we pray, say 'Father,'" is the direction. Does desire goad us? Does sorrow sadden us? Does defeat dishearten us? Does fear shake us? Does temptation threaten us? Does joy cheer us? Does disease weaken us? Does the future appall us? In these and all other cases say, "Father." The unseen is not a stranger nor an impersonal force. Father is the heart of the universe and we come as children with the warmest word of the language upon our lips. The second thing is that I am not to make my prayer alone. This is not for my private use, but I must bring my brother with me when I enter my prayer-room. The old legend that no one is permitted to enter heaven without a comrade is tremendously true in the attitude instilled here. There is not an 'I' in it; it is always 'us'. What I would have for myself I must be willing to share if I am to bring such a petition into my relationships with "Father." His other children are as much a part of the family as am I. There is another thing. The interests of the Kingdom precede our personal wants. There is something bigger than bread in the world of God's affairs. And it is certainly true that if we obey the injunetion and pray and work for the Kingdom in which the will of God shall be done on earth as it is in Heaven we would probably need go no farther for the lesser things of bread, etc. would be already in our possession. Who ean imagine poverty in the Kingdom of universal good? Would there be the temptation for social sinning in a world of brothers of the family of God?

There is still another attitude to be mentioned and that is God's wish that we include all necessities of living within the scope of our praying but that the response of prayer is dependent upon our spirit toward others. If there is no willingness to forgive then there is no possibility for our receiving any such thing for ourselves. My nature is such that only that which I am willing to share with my brother man can become a part of my own life. And if we carry these attitudes into the presence of God formulas of words will be of very little necessity.

Just around the Corner

EVEN big-city folks must have their "neighborhood stores"! Most of them would no more think of going down town to fight their way through the crowds in search of a roast for dinner than they would of walking to the factory to get a pair of shoes.

City women know that their neighborhood stores can supply them just what they want — and that, in most cases, the service is more alert and friendly.

The same thing is true of this "neighborhood". Our merchants—the men whose ads you read in this paper —are in position to furnish your home with the best and most popular brands of goods. Not only can they save you money, but they gladly relieve you of a lot of worry and loss of time.

THE PAGAN'S PRAYER.

By F. F. CORLISS.

Oh thou who art supreme on earth,
In all the worlds above,
Who dwells in every home and hearth
To teach us human love;
Who gives us birth, health and mirth,
Wisdom, wealth and power,
Who lives with us through life
And through our mortal hour—

Teach me there is no hell to fear,
Or far-off heaven to gain,
But to live uprightly here
And cause no brotherman pain.
If there is a hell, I make it here
When I go wrong—
And heaven, too, when I am right;
So keep me strong.

Remove my selfish, heartless,
Blindness and grasping greed;
Teach me more kindness,
How to live and serve others' need.
May I strew flowers in man's pathway
Throughout life,
Rather than save them for his grave
That ends the strife.

Teach me to learn, to make a life,
And not a mean existence,
To conquer life's temptations
By the power of Thy assistance;
Teach me wealth is not to waste,
But earn and not despise;
Not to hoard it in excess
As life's most cherished prize.

May I feed the hungry, heal the sick
And ease another's woe—
Feel that I am on the road
Thou wouldst have me go;
Save me alike from bigotry,
Intolerance and pious discontent;
Teach me Thy laws, Thy truth obey,
That life be well spent.

Ground my life in righteousness,
Character and honest, useful deeds;
Let me not worship Thee in myths,
Miracles and truth-denying ereeds.
Thou wouldst not send us all to hell
For sins we did not do,
And strew damnation o'er Thy land
As our ignorance, ye knew,

In sea, soil and sky we see Thee
Working for the human race;
But when Thy love ennobles man,
We know Thee, see Thy face.
When we want to work, walk, talk
And pray to Thee with sanity,
We must do so in a helpful service
To all humanity.

To live, love, enjoy, make character
And be reflective,
To exalt Thy life in man's,
Man's in Thine is life's objective.
Thy dwelling place is highest
Where highest is found in man,
To fill our lives, our souls
With reghteousness is Thy plan.

Immortal life is ours; its births and deaths
An endless repetition;
Ever aspiring through many forms,
It known no inhibition.
So teach us there is naught to fear,
Here or hereafter,
But to live, love and learn and fill
Our lives with laughter.

Teach us that as we think
So we beeome in fact and deed;
Save us from a false, blind belief,
We do not need.
It deludes the mind, dwarfs the soul,
Throws reason out.
So teaeh us only truth of life
And Thee and cure our doubt.

In all Thy works Thou are eoncealed,
As force ,the universal cause;
In man we see Thee revealed
In conscious life, love and laws.
Teach us to find the soul of man;
Be just, know and see—
Only then shall we find,
FoHow, know and be like Thee.

STAND BY YOUR GOVERNMENT

The strength of foreign propaganda in the United States is again indicated by the echoes of the American press and on the floor of Congress of the outery of alien elements against the protection of American rights and just interests in Nicaragua.

The Monroe Doctrine stands in the way of the Balkanizing of Central and South America by the European powers. If the Monroe Doctrine is to be maintained, the United States must continue to take an interest in the maintenance of orderly constitutional government in the republics of this hemisphere. Failure to do this would mean failure of the Monroe Doctrine. Hence every newspaper in the United States which customarily stands for European as opposed to American interests is today joining in the European chorus of detraction against the United States.

Another element of alien inspiration is that which has shown itself to be in sympathy with Soviet Russia. The same men in public life who advocate closer relations with Moscow communism are naturally enough protesting against interference with the effort of Moscow communism to extend the area of its influence in this hemisphere, by the use of communised Mexico as a cats-paw. The Daily Worker, Chicago national organ of the communists, prints an article by the notorious "Bill" Dunne, outlining world-wide communist strategy and pointing out the interest the communist movement has in the creation of hatred of America in this hemisphere through the cry of "imperialism," and in the success of the Mexican program in Nicaragua.

Attention is called to the fact that hatred of the United States is growing throughout Latin America. This hatred has been created by an appeal to the prejudices of the people of these republics by our European trade rivals. They were on the job before the World War and they are at it again now. It has been fanned by European radicals under Moscow direction in the hope of attaining the bolshevist objective of overthrow of the government of the Unted States. It is as unwarranted as the hatred created by demagogues in Europe, assisted by the type of American who engages in anti-American propaganda under the inspiration of aliens on the ground that the United States has played the Shylock in the settlement of European debts.

Hatred thus created and stimulated by designing anti-American interests at home and abroad cannot be allayed by any sign of weakness. The actual purpose and performances of the United States have nothing to do with it. The United States has at all times since the Civil War had the power to take anything it wanted in this hemisphere. It has taken nothing from any American sovereignty. We did buy the Panama Canal zone for the construction of a great engineering work even if more valuable to the Central and South American republics than to the United States. We freed Cuba and turned the island over to its people, and have ceded to Cuba the disputed Isle of Pines. These facts do not count with the American-haters of this hemisphere. We cannot gain the friendship of this element. But if we cannot secure the affection of those determined to hate the United States, we can prevent that hatred from eventuating in war by a firm policy in Nicaragua which will prevent the possibility of attack by a Latin combination under Mexican and Moscow direction. We can at least command respect.

These critics of alien inspiration have much to say about the domination of Central and South America by American "capitalism." Central and South America have vast undeveloped resources and little capital of their own. Foreign capital is required in order that the industrial status of these nations, including the standard of living, may be raised. This capital must come either from the United States or from Europe. It will not go into these countries unless it is guaranteed some degree of protection. That the American capital invested in the other republics of this hemisphere has been a curse rather than a blessing to them is a claim utterly without justification. That the confiscation of this capital would be helpful to the masses of these republics is a theory equally without justification.

In their efforts to uphold American rights, defend just American interests and thwart the unfriendly designs of anti-American elements in this hemisphere, President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg deserve and will receive the undivided support of genuine Americans, despite the outcry of elements and interests naturally disloyal to the American government or naturally loyal to some foreign interest or group of interests. The extent to which this opposition has been able to get its propaganda before the American people is astonishing, but as the dust kicked up by these pseudo-American interests has lifted, and the people have begun to see the real situation clearly, American patriotism is again rallying to the support of an executive who has the wisdom to see his duty and the courage to do it.

A friend of Mrs. Lydia Broadwater Green, of near Bond, who recently celebrated her ninety-fourth anniversary, sent the following to The Republican for publication:

In speaking of the great and the near-great, we feel that Mrs. Lydia Broadwater Green, of near Bond, Md., is entitled to a place among the notables of this section of the State, she being the great-great-grandmother of seven husky chaps. Her ninety-fourth birthday was celebrated on January 4, 1927, at the home of her son, John W. Green with whom the aged woman resides. These birthdays are always the occasion for a large gathering of the family and friends.

Grandmother Green has seven children living; 41 grandchildren; 65 great-grandchildren and 7 great-great-grandchildren. The daughter, Mrs. Charles Swauger, of New Germany, is a great-grandmother; her daughter in turn, Mrs. Lou Brenneman, of Frostburg, a grandmother, and her daughter and son-in-law the parents of seven living children, making five generations now living.

Grantsville High Organizes Calf Club.

For the primary purpose of promoting purebred dairy stock, a calf club has been organized in the Grantsville High School by M. W. Whiteford, instructor in agriculture and animal husbandry.

Calves for the club members will be procured from accredited purebred herds of known ability for producing milk in quantity and quality. The club is known as the Maple Land Calf Club of Grantsville, and no one breed will be catered to, as the breed of calf selected by any member of the club will depend upon his particular fancy and the judgment of his parents.

"Besides the primary purpose of the organization," said Mr. Whiteford, "it will teach the boys how to feed and properly care for the dairy type cows."

The boys who have enrolled to date in the club are William Turner, Henry Patton, Alvin Beachy, Clyde Beachy, Markel Stanton and Walter Rizenbaker, and the breeds of calves chosen so far have been of the Jersey and Guernsey type.

B. & O. R. R. Issues Handsome Calendar.

A handsome lithographic calendar, printed in colors from an original painting, has been issued by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The painting shows the laying of the first stone of the railroad, near Baltimore, July 4, 1828, by virtue of the charter granted the company on February 28, 1827, with the slogan of "One Hundred Years of Service."

The artist has carefully painted in colors the costumes worn by the principals on the occasion, with Masonic insignia, etc. The painting shows Charles Carroll of Carrollton, at the time the only remaining signer of the Declaration of Independence, standing in a white suit, with a spade in his hand, with Philip E. Thomas, first president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, standing at his right. Numerous figures in the foreground of the painting are officers of Masonic lodges who actually laid the first stone. Mr. Carroll, in turning ground for the stone, pronounced it "among the most important acts of my life, second only to my signing of the Declaration of Independence, if even it be second to that."

What, Where, When and Why.

A caller who dropped in at the headquarters of the State Department of Health the other day, was surprised when shown the "day by day" record that is kept by the Bureau of Communicable Diseases of cases of sickness that occur in the counties. In explanation, Dr. R. H. Riley, the chief of the Bureau, said that reports are received every day either from the deputy State health officers, the local health officers or from physicians in attendance on persons ill with any of the catching diseases. A record is kept of them—what the diseases are, where they have occurred, and just when they started—so that measures may be undertaken promptly to protect, first, those who are sick, and second, to prevent the spread of the disease to other members of the household and to the community.

"Fifteen years ago," Dr. Riley said, "there were only ten diseases on what we call our 'notifiable' list; now there are forty-seven. The list includes all of the diseases that spread from person to person—typhoid, diphtheria, influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis, the venereal diseases, the so-called children's diseases, measles, scarlet fever, whooping cough, and others just as communicable but less frequent of occurrence. The doctor in attendance is expected to notify the local health officer, who in turn reports it to the Bureau. If no doctor is called the head of the house must report the sickness.

"From local notification, the plan has been extended to cover the entire country, through the U. S. Public Health Service in Washington. There is a still further exchange now, through the Health Section of the League of Nations, which gives warning of the outbreaks of disease in the remotest parts of the world.

"Disease is one of the things that knows no boundaries. In these days of travel by land and sea, on the open road, in busses, in cars, trains, boats and airplanes, there is more general mingling of human beings than ever before in the world's history and these disease prevention measures are for the coming safety of all of us. The reason for them is summed up in the statement that appears each week at the head of the report sent out by the U. S. Public Health Service: 'No disease without knowledge of when, where and under what conditions cases are occurring.'"

The extreme cold of Saturday evening and Sunday morning was felt more keenly perhaps than upon a former occasion during the present winter with the mercury several degrees colder than on Saturday, when it registered zero, with a stiff breeze blowing which intensified the cold and driving it through the heaviest clothing. MRS. ALMA HANSEN,
THE TURNEY FAMILY.

THE RAWHIDE WELCOME

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

THERE was the greatest contrast imaginable between Dick Chester and Sammy Bent. Both were sons of old families, but that was the sole similarity. Dick Chester's father owned the joint stock bank; Sammy went to work there as an office boy after his father failed and committed suicide. Dick patronized the other with good-natured contempt. Sammy was out of his class.

Myrtle Havens was ont of Sammy's class. Dick and she were engaged, but it was plain that Sammy loved her in a moon-calf way. He ran errands for her and made himself generally useful. In fact, Sammy had snch manifest plodding industry that old Chester took a fancy to him, gave him a clerkship, and somethnes invited the lad to his house.

Dick might have married Myrtle, but her father died suddenly, forfeiting his $50,000 insurance, which, it was found, had lapsed months before, during the beginning of his illness. Dick threw Myrtle over. He was criticized for this, but he could afford to laugh at criticism, with a wealthy father. Old Chester was furious about it. The fact was, Dick had been tiring of Myrtle, and when the girl chivalrously offered to release him he seized the opportunity.

Dick got tired of the bank and stayed away so long that his father got him a position as secretary to an exclusive club. There Dick was in his element. But the great surprise came when old Reynolds died, and Sammy found himself promoted to the position of manager at twenty-eight.

Myrtle Havens had been living in retirement since the breaking off of her engagement. How Sammy got to visiting her nobody knew. Perhaps it was his plodding, kindly way that attracted the girl. But before very long she had turned to him with that understanding that a girl attains for the man who loves her without thought of anything but herself. And after a while it was understood that they were engaged.

Now if Dick had had any decency he would have refrained from commenting on this situation. Instead of which he went to Sammy.

"Folks are saying that you and Myrtle Havens are going to hit it off together," he said.

Sammy turned white, and for the first time in his life he experieuced a desire to strike Chester. But he only assented.

"Well, I hope everything will turn out all right," said Dick. "Myrtle's all right in her way. A little slow, though. Sammy, I want to borrow a thousand dollars. And I don't want the old man to know. It's pretty expensive at the club, and I've dropped a good deal lately. Let me have a thousand for three months on my note, will you?"

Sammy knew that it was not legitimate business to lend the bank's money to Dick. But he lent him the thousand, chiefly to get rid of him, and he indorsed the note so that the loss might fall on him if there were any.

Dick could not pay. He renewed the note and then failed. Sammy paid the money. A month later Dick came to him again.

"Sammy," he said, "I've got the chance of a lifetime to make a fortune. Lend me two thousand more."

Sammy refused, and Dick went purple with indignation.

"What's the matter?" he yelled. "Ain't my name good enough? Say, are you going to take advantage of me, just because you know the old man and I don't hit it off?"

"I don't feel justified in making you the loan," said Sammy.

"Then lend it to me yourself. You're as rich as Croesus," blustered Dick.

"Can't" answered Sammy. And Dick surveyed him with a malevolent glare.

"All right!" he sneered. "I guess you've unmasked yourself now. Just wait till the bank comes to me, Sammy!"

And he stalked away in a fury. Sammy went to Myrtle that night and she cried a little and agreed to wait a year longer.

There was a good deal in Dick's threat. It was known that old Chester could not live long. His end was curiously sudden, and old Sammy was with him. The old banker was conscious until the end, and he had a confidential talk with Sammy before he died. It was a good thing he did not see Dick staring at his body an hour after his death and cursing Sammy for not having summoned him.

However, Dick had the bank. His first act was to give Sammy a month's notice.

"I told you you'd be sorry for that wretched trick you played on me," he said, sneering. "See if you can get another job. Not in this town, Sammy."

Sammy's answer, at the end of the month, was to marry Myrtle, and they went away on a honeymoon that lasted nearly two months. At the end of that time Sammy was back in town, looking spruce and smarter than he had ever looked before, and living in an elegant house. It was whispered that his wife had been left a legacy.

"He won't last long," sneered Dick. [illegible] who wasn't going [illegible] was in a bad [illegible] speculating reckdessly, and no bank can stand the drain on its funds that wild management entails. At the end of the third month Dick saw himself at his wits' end. His father's fortune had proved nonexistent. There was nothing but the bank capital, and that was disappearing like snow in May. A meeting of the shareholders had been summoned, and there was talk of deposing Dick.

Dick, moody and restless, glared at Sammy when he saw him, spruce and apparently self-satisfied, strolling jauntily down the street. He glared more when he was accompanied by his pretty wife. Marriage had given Myrtle back her youth and loveliness, and Dick, smothering his rage, renewed his acquaintance with her and her husband.

"Sorry I had to fire you, Sammy," he explained. "But I guess you're pretty slow as a bank manager. No hard feelings?"

"None whatever," said Sammy.

Dick was mad about Myrtle again. He took advantage of Sammy's slowness to press his attentions upon Sammy's wife. He plunged blindly into the flirtation. He contrived to put Sammy in absurd positions—as when he sent him into his own backyard to hunt for chicken thieves, while he sat in the parlor and talked amiable nonsense for an hour to Myrtle.

It was soon the talk of the town that Myrtle was far from indifferent to Dick. People wondered why Sammy did not seem to realize it. They would have stared had they heard what Dick said to Myrtle on a certain evening.

"I'm sick of it all. And I'm going away. I've got a big sum put by, Myrtle, and you can leave that hoob and start in with me in the West. I've always loved you, and I'll give you the time of your life, dear."

And Myrtle, very pale, promised to let him call for her upon a certain evening when Sammy was to be out. But she would not let Dick kiss her until they were in the train together.

At the meeting of shareholders Dick made no fight for his position. He casually indicated that he was tired of the job, and intended to resign. If they were not able to keep things afloat without him, let them get another manager. If his father's fortune had not been dissipated, he would have made the bank pay 12 per cent.

Then came the surprise of the evening. Old Chester's fortune was found. And it had been placed in Sammy's hands, for reinvestment "as soon as my son, by his folly, has wrecked my bank," as the lawyer read to the meeting. And Sammy was to be president. That much went with his stock, which was now a majority after the planned reconstruction.

Dick Chester put on his hat and glared about him.

"So that's the sort of trick that sneak and the old man put over on me!" he shouted. "Who could carry on a bank like that?"

"There was enough capital to give a conservative man a chance, Mr. Chester," observed the lawyer mildly.

Dick swung out of the office. He knew that Sammy would be out of town until the morrow. At nine in the evening he called at Sammy's house. Myrtle met him, her face agitated, her hat awry on her head.

"Are you sure, Dick?" she whispered.

"Dead sure, darling," hiccuped Dick.

"Come in a minute," whispered Myrtle.

Dick followed her into the parlor. Myrtle locked the door behind him. Dick found himself confronting Sammy. Myrtle took a whip from behind a curtain and put it in Sammy's hand.

"What the—" Dick began. "So, it's a trap, is it? Let me out! Let me out, I say!"

Sammy flicked him about the legs once or twice lightly, and Dick fell on his knees and howled. Sammy unlocked the door.

"Is that all, Sammy dear?" asked Myrtle reproachfully.

"Oh, yes, I guess so. He isn't worth any more," answered Sammy. "Hi! Get out! And don't show your face in this town again or I'll have you arrested for embezzlement. You know what I mean!"

And this time the whip really descended with vigor upon Dick's back. Sammy was losing his temper for the first time in his life. Dick cast one look at his face and rushed for the door. But before he reached the depot, Myrtle and Sammy, in each other's arms, had forgotten all about him.

Powdered Milk

According to "The Story of Foods," by Forrest Crissey, powdered milk is made by forcing fresh milk by compressed air through fine nozzles, so that it is sprayed out in a mist. Directly below the nozzles are openings sending up very hot air. The instant the milk mist strikes this hot air it is turned into steam and carried up through a funnel-shaped cone into a large room or cupola. The sides of this room are screened with woolen fabric or mill gauze, through which the hot air and steam pass. But the solid particles of the milk are caught by it and dropped into bins.

"Silencers'" Good Work

With the development of a mechanical silencer, oil-electric locomotives have been made as noiseless and smokeless as an automobile on the city streets. As it rests atop the engine, the device traps the escaping engine exhaust without interfering with the outflow of gases to the atmosphere. The exhaust passes through the silencing nuit with a rotary motion, much as does water in a turbine. A smooth and unobstructed passage is offered which reduces back pressure to the lowest possible point.

Two in a Posy Garden

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

JOHN SCOTT, novelist, had a mere garden acquaintance with the girl next door—an over-the-fence impersonal chat occasionally about flowers, shrubs, grubs, etc. When their separate garden operations brought them near enough the dividing line to make conversation a neighborly courtesy they exchanged ideas.

It was therefore with a sense of sudden loss that Scott watched his fair neighbor and her aunt leaving apparently for a long journey—judging by the amount of luggage, steamer tagged, which burdened the station taxi. He felt sorry for her garden, too; with no attention it would be unable to battle against the heat and would present a sad aspect when its owner returned.

He was relieved, a few days later, to see a comfortable-looking couple coming to the house—apparently it had been let furnished. That might insure care being given the garden.

It didn't, however, and Scott watched with sickening feelings the rapid deterioration of the loved garden on which its fair owner had expended so much care. He used to see her, up early in the morning, tending and nourishing the flowers so dearly bought or coming home after business hours laden with impoverished plants. Scott supposed she had to buy at bargain prices, but it was nothing less than a miracle the way they responded to good care and nourishment.

He fretted and fretted, as day by day the girl's garden suffered and drooped. No water, no mulching, no trimming, and not even the profusion of blooms picked.

Scott took the matter into his own hands and knocked at the door of his neighbor's house.

"Madam," asked Scott, "would you object if I take a few mornings caring for the garden? I have much spare time and know the young lady who left would appreciate it. She's tremendously keen on her garden."

The tenant of the house was only too pleased, because, as she said, "We are city folks, and don't know a thing about gardening."

So Scott set to work that evening with hose and hoe and clippers and enjoyed his neighborly task immensely. He enjoyed it even more when he realized suddenly that there was a charming daughter in the family and that she was standing close beside him offering him her assistance.

"I'm not much of a gardener," she said shyly, "but would just love to help you if you would show me how." Her eyes were so pleasing and so blue that Scott was certain he would.

"You might start by cutting some sweet peas—and taking off all the withered ones," he told her, and she turned obediently. He watched her tear at the vines until he couldn't stand it and swiftly handed her his blunt little scissors. "Better to cut them gently," he said.

And when she learned he was a novelist she bought one of his books.

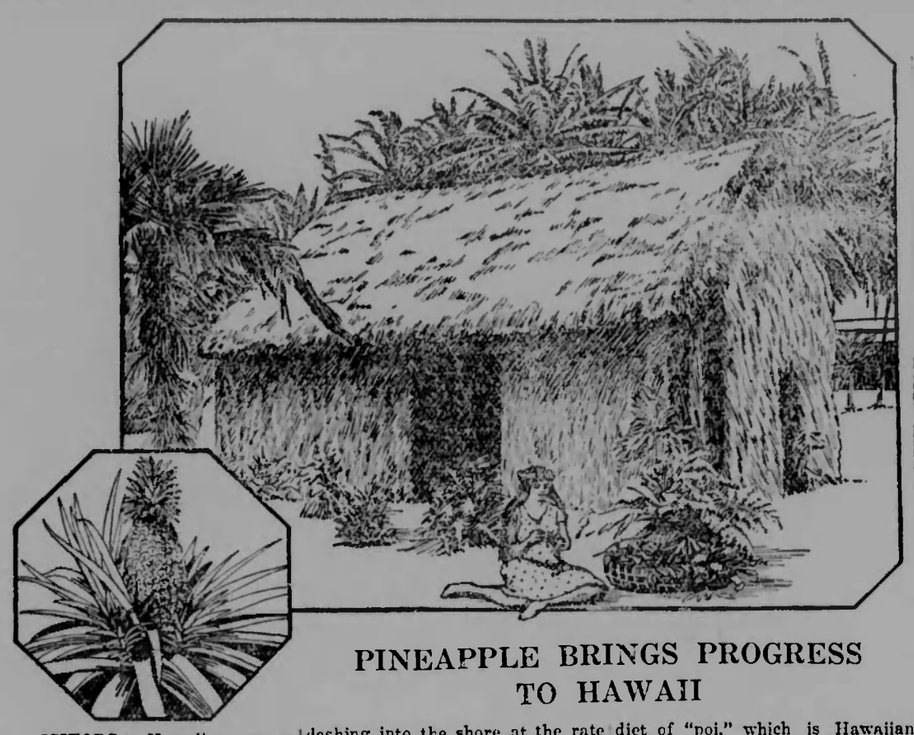
Before many weeks had passed Scott was beginning to forget the owner of the house and garden and to look forward with joy to Ethel Wade's return from the office and their evenings together. He wondered if he were fickle or whether the other interest had been merely that of two garden lovers.

Helen Fairfax and her aunt returned on the same day that her tenants went back to the city. She was enraptured with the beauty of her garden and her eyes glowed happily.

"Yes," said Ethel, "I have worked terribly hard taking care of it all by myself. She looked at Helen swiftly, then added, "I asked to borrow a hoe from that man next door, but he was so boorish about it that I wouldn't take it."

Helen glanced back in amazement. "Oh, he didn't look like that type of man. I won't borrow from him, then." Which of course was exactly what Ethel wanted.

But next morning early when the sun was just over the house tops, Helen slipped out into her garden and was touching all her plants with loving fingers, pressing her face into the big roses, when she was startled to hear the voice of Scott welcoming her home.



She smiled gayly and returned his greeting. "I am glad to get back to my flowers," she told him, "and that young girl says she has worked like a slave so it would be nice for me to come back to. Wasn't it kind of her?"

Scott couldn't quite believe his ears, but certainly no one could doubt the truth in the lovely eyes looking with such earnest directness into his own.

"Very," he said. His fingers found a bit of paper on which the address of Ethel was written and he calmly lit his pipe with it.

"I could hardly stand it to leave my garden, but I couldn't afford to turn down the very flattering offer my employer made me to go abroad with him as his secretary. But oh, how glad I am to be home."

"You're not half so glad as I am," said Scott to himself, and after that early morning meeting things developed rather swiftly for them. It was kind neighbors, however, who put Helen straight as to who took care of her garden.

PINEAPPLE BRINGS PROGRESS TO HAWAII

VISITORS to Hawaii are sometimes surprised to find instead of grass huts, ovens built in the ground, beautiful American homes, cosmopolitan cuisines and pineapple plantations which are among the most modern of any plantations in the world.

They are apt to forget that although the islands of Hawaii have been civilized only a comparatively short time as civilization goes, during that time they have been civilized at high pressure. Owing to the magic of Hawaiian climate and natural beauty, they have quickly become one of the most cosmopolitan spots of the world.

It is this curious mixture of the old and the new which makes Hawaii so interesting.

Yesterday the little girl who sat before her grass hut knew only the art of mat-weaving or lauhala hat making. In the long Hawaiian evenings she sat inside her hut listening to the legends of the Fire-gods told by the old folks as they sat mending their nets for the next day's catch. She could swim and dive, shinny a cocoanut tree and drop down the big nuts whose milk was so cooling even under tropical suns; and she could go "torch fishing" with the men who waded deep out at sea with torch and spear to catch the squib and eel.

Today she sits on the lanai, or veranda, and reads, or chats in very good English with friends, over Kona coffee, Hawaiian pastry, pineapple jam or poha jelly. She still loves adventure. Often in the evenings she goes down to the big American hotels and enjoys the jazz music, even though it is different from the wailing melodies of her people. For [illegible] sport she chooses surf riding—dashing into the shore at the rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour, erect and poised on a bit of board driven by breakers.

Most of the changes in the manner of social life in Hawaii have come in the last 25 years, and much of it can be traced to the time when Hawaii was found to be the ideal spot for pineapple plantations and the biggest ones in the world began to be established there.

With the pineapple plantations came the opportunity for natives to find abundant work in the fields—out-of-door work in the land they loved best. Higher wages than they had ever before received enabled them to think of things outside the little banann and taro patch at home.

Schools were built and with education came the desire for better homes. Slowly the little grass huts gave way to small cottages. These cottages grew in size as the workers became more prosperous and many who became rich in the industry built homes which are now pointed out to sightseers of the Paradise Islands.

Women were employed in the new pineapple canneries and ideals of cleanliness instilled into them which were carried to the home. They enjoyed wearing the snowy white caps and aprons which were the uniforms supplied to workers in the factories, and with the rubber gloves policy of pineapple canneries which prohibits human hands ever touching the fruit, came a new idea of sanitary methods of cooking.

Warm meals served the workers at noon in the pineapple canneries introduced into Hawaii some new dishes which the women found lent variety to their rather limited diet of "poi," which is Hawaiian bread made from the taro root, fish, cooked bananas and raw pineapples. They learned among other things something of the dietetic benefit of the canned pineapple which they were producing and up in the big cafeteria, they sampled new ways of serving it.

With employment for women in the canneries came day nurseries for children. These nurseries were equipped with the best gymnasiums and playgrounds for children. Clinics were introduced so that "better babies" as well as "better pineapples" could be grown in Hawaii. Trained kindergartners were hired to teach the kiddies organized play, and dietitians taught the mothers what foods their children should eat.

Hawaiians began to take a keen interest in the big pineapple plantations which afforded them a better living, and they took a greater pride in making them the best fields and canneries found anywhere in the world.

Climate brought wealthy visitors from everywhere to enjoy the glory of Hawaiian sunshine and the magic of Hawaiian moonlight. Hotels with their entertainment brought over to Hawaii the gaiety and life that Hawaiians love.

An annual pageant commemorates the Hawaii that used to be. Great luaus, feasts, are held, food is cooked in underground ovens, and visitors are treated to a taste of the Hawaiian bread, made from taro root. Strains of Hawaiian music float out through the palm trees and graceful hula dancers with leis of woven flowers toss these tokens to newcomers to the Paradise of the Pacific, who wish for a glimpse of the Hawaii of yesterday.

If the things we see are all that be,
Then what of the things we see not?
If the ancient past is a vacuum vast,
The future is not worth an ingot.

The capricious weather took a very frenkish turn last Saturday, sending the mercury tumbling down until it reached a point eight degrees below zero on Sunday morning and as a consequence everybody stayed by their firesides.

Rev. E. E. Campbell is still confined to his home where he is slowly recovering from an attack of lumbago.

Lumber is being rapidly hauled from the Back Creek Lumber Company's plant, near here, to Jennings for shipment. The recent snow has afforded an excellent opportunity for this work and some days as many as twenty teams may be seen on the road with sleds heavily loaded with lumber.

Mr. Elmer Shawley and son George visited relatives near Meyersdale, Pa., last Saturday and Sunday.

Prof. C. M. Friend, principal of the village school, visited his home near Friendsville over the week-end, being obliged to make the journey, going and coming, on foot, the roads being impassible for automobiles.

Mrs. Clare Speicher and Mrs. Fannie Ault, of Accident, spent a day or two with their father, Mr. Perry H. Broadwater, of this village, recently.

Work still continues on the Casselman Valley Railroad, and there are rumors that in the spring a considerable extension of the line will be

MT. LAKE PARK.

The Building of Mountain Lake Park.

Continuing the history incident to the survey of the land upon which Mt. Lake Park now stands, The Republican's Park correspondent writes further concerning the preliminary work:

We made a complete outline survey of the entire tract, finding many of the old rails that had enclosed this land for a cattle range.

We then surveyed the streams and watercourses and afterwards leveled around for the lake, as the name, Mountain Lake Park, was the one chosen by the purchasers.

Mr. John M. Davis was asked to secure men to remove the underbrush, so he selected the late William Hall as the foreman and he and his men worked on until winter came and then in the following spring kept on until about oneh undred acres had been cleared.

It was decided to make tne ownership of the property a stock corporation limited to fifteen persons at one thousand dollars a share, which was soon subscribed, and a board of directors was selected, composed of Rev. C. P. Masden, Dr. T. H. Logan, John M. Davis, Dr. John F. Goucher and Dr. J. B. VanMeter. The officers were Rev. Masden, president; J. C. Alderson, secretary; A. L. List, treasurer; J. M. Davis, manager or superintendent.

The services of M. E. Fall, of Baltimore, were secured in laying off and mapping the grounds. When this work was completed an excursion and an auction sale was made, resulting in the purchase of quite a number of the lots and in a short time after this lumber for the construction of buildings began to arrive from the near-by saw mills. Cottages began to spring up in many parts of the Park, so that by July quite a number were ready for occupancy.

Mrs. S. L. Allen, of Newburg, W. Va., was the first one to occupy her new home in the Park. Those who built and occupied their cottages the first year were Rev. C. P. Masden, Rev. J. B. Mulford, J. C. Alderson, D. C. List, Rev. John Thompson, Mrs. L. E. Carr, J. C. Bardall, S. L. Allen, C. M. Babb, C. W. Connor, Rev. E. W. Ryan, G. W. Atkinson, Mrs. Martha M. Mills, Miss Maggie S. Watson, Col. Wm. Beall, Col. W. H. Tarr, Mrs. M. J. Milholland, Dr. J. F. Goucher, Dr. J. B. VanMeter, Judge Elliott and Dr. T. H. Logan.

Davis & Townshend, then leading merchants of Oakland, erected a large two-story building and their families occupied the upper floor as a residence and the lower floor was used for mercantile purposes. J. A. Enlow built a cottage tent near the auditorium and lived in it during the summer months.

The auditorium was built and ready for the first program, the Sunday School Assembly, which began July 26th, 1892, and continued until Aug. 1st. Among the speakers at this assembly were Rev. Jessie B. Young, Dr. Thomas Guard, Dr. Lyman Abbott Dr. Wm. M. Frysinger, A. A. Wright and Dr. J. B. VanMeter, and possibly others. This and copies of the earlier programs are still in the hands of the writer.

During the first year, a portion of the Mountain Lake Hotel was constructed, since which time additions have been erected until now it is four or five times as large as the original building.

The Sunday School Assembly was continued for several years, or until it was merged into the Mountain Chautauqua, and for three years following the founding of the Park a camp meetings was held which was conducted by local and visiting ministers, following which it was turned over to Rev. John Thompson, who invited Rev. David B. Updegraph and Dr. Dugan Clark, ministers of the Society of friends, who conducted the meetings for several years, and which under various leaders have continued each year up to the present time.

The Christian Temperance Union and other conventions were brought here from time to time, making this a place prominent for large gatherings for Christian and intellectual meetings.

Mr. A. R. Sperry, of Paw Paw, W. Va., leased a plot of ground near the spot where the postoffice building now stands and erected a postoffice and railway station combined, which was afterwards replaced by the present station building erected by the Baltimore and Ohio Railway Company, and another building was then put up for postoffice purposes.

The Association offered the railway company one-half of the ice on the lake each year if that corporation would build a dam to be donated hy the Park owners, hut the B. & O. decided to have a dam of its own, so quite a plant was put in on the Little Yough, a half-mile east of the Park. This was later abandoned hy the railway company on account of unsanitary matters.

The contract for building the lake in the Park was given to C. W. Connor and D. C. List, of Wheeling. A good sized ice house was built on the west side of the lake where ice was cut and stored for use the following summer.

Dr. William Frysinger, of Carlisle, Pa., became deeply interested in the Park and its development and he was asked to erect a suitable office building for the Association, which was done and ready for use the second year. Shortly after this J. M. Jarboe, of Oakland, erected for the Association Assembly Hall, which added materially to the convenience and comfort of the large gatherings then being held and which continued from year to year for a long time.

There is a fine crop of ice on the lake now which is being harvested at the present time.

The Parent-Teachers Association had a fine gathering on Monday night at the Park school building.

The special meetings at Loch Lynn are still going on under the direction of Rev. F. L. Fultz.

THE FORTY-DOLLAR HUSBAND

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W. G. Chapman.)

I AM NOT a "movie" fan, but my work neeessitates my seeing many of the picture plays that are shown at the theaters. It would not interest you if I were to explain what my work is: to be very brief, my company is engaged in an enterprise for the purpose of clearing up the breaks and spots in the films. However, I had been attending the theater two or three times a week when I began to be aware of the man who alwuys occupied the bench half-way along the theater on the left side.

Apparently the recognition was mutual, for one evening during an interlude he entered into conversation with me.

"A lover of the films, I see," he began, with a half sneer.

I did not feel inclined to enlighten him as to my business. "Like yourself?" I suggested.

"I hate them, sir," he answered. "Did it ever occur to you what a lot of life one learns from watching these plays?"

"Life of a kind," I answered. "But surely they do not represent life as it is."

"Of course they don't," he retorted. "These plays are written for the crowd that loves sensationalism. No, sir, what I mean is, reading between the lines of the plays. Reading the lips of the characters, sir."

I suppose he took me for a very innocent person, for he plunged at once into confidences.

"I am a home-loving man," he said. "I make forty dollars a week. I suppose I shall always make forty dollars a week, neither more or less, until I grow old, by which time, if I am good for a few more years, I expect to be able to retire on some very modest savings. Well, sir, a forty-dollar man—you know him. I'm the type—look at me! Decent clothes, but a little faded; clean linen, a sober necktie, and yet the unmistakable forty-dollar stamp of the soul—what?"

He fitted the type so perfectly that I was at a loss for words.

"Well, then, you know the sort of wife a forty-dollar man requires. A quiet, home-loving body, a good cook, fond of a little harmless relaxation, a girl in to help on Saturdays, no washing to do, but handy with the broom. You understand? Well, suppose the wife of a forty-dollar man took a fancy to go on the stage—what would you do?"

"I'll tell you what I would do," I answered. "I should try to gratify her wish. I'd let her taste stage life to the full. It would make her or break her. Excuse my frankness, but it's no use trying to bottle up those longings. It doesn't work."

He nodded. "That's what I did," he said. "I thought she had no talent, that she would get tired when she tasted the theatrical life. But she didn't. She proved to have genius. She went into the "movie" game. They're paying her two thousand a week. She's Julia Rome."

"Julia Rome is your wife?" I inquired.

"Hush-sh!" came from all around us. The screen was alive again. It was that famous play, "Home and the World." I saw Julia Rome in a thousand poses before the spectators. The tragedy of the situation gripped me—the forty-dollar husband watching his wife night after night, as she posed and postured before the diversified audiences.

In the next interlude he turned to me again.

"You saw her?" he said. "That's my wife. Yes, sir; she proved the success of the season. And she—she left me."

I could say nothing to that.

"She left me, sir. There was an actor chap—John Howe. You saw him. He always plays with her. She used to bring him to our house—or rather our landlord's house, a little, cheap, two-family house in the suburban district. I could see the sneer in his heart as he looked at me. Six months ago she began bringing him home. In three months I saw how the land lay. She was tired of me, tired of a forty-dollar husband. I gave her her choice. It was Howe or me. She—she cried, sir."

I could make no answer to that, either.

"I drove her away. I was too proud. She said if ever I sent for her she'd come back to me. But of course that was just talk. And then I resolved that if there was anything between her and that Howe fellow I'd kill him. That's what I'm here for.

"I told you it was reading between the lines, didn't I? Naturally, these actor folk don't talk about the play all the time they're acting. I take it that it becomes a sort of second nature to them. They can be killing each other, and breaking jail, and making love, and all the while they're telling each other what a fine dinner that was last night, and will the rolls be good for antoing next week?

"I have a brother in the education business. He has charge of an institution for deaf and dumb children. I went to him and asked him to teach me their language. He didn't know why I wanted it, but he taught it to me."

"Finger language?" I asked.

"No, sir. Progressive institutions don't teach that at all. It's lip reading. I took a job there as porter. I knew I could always get a forty-dollar job when I wanted it. I'm a specialist in wool goods, and there's always an opening for a low-priced man. I took a job as porter in the institution and worked there six weeks. At the end of that time I could read lip language. Then I began watching the films."

He turned on me fiercely and grasped me by the arm.

"I've been watching her every night since then," he said. "I've heard everything she's said to Howe. When she had first left me of course they were just friends. After a couple of months the new plays were coming on, and she looked kind of sad. Once I heard him tell her to cheer up. Well, she looked grateful, sir—he was chasing her round the block then, and she looked grateful just for a second, when he had her by the hair. That started me thinking.

"After that he began making love to her. Never one instant did he stop. And she didn't say much, just kept quiet and went on with her work—"

"Hush-sh!" exclaimed the audience.

The forty-dollar man whispered:

"This is a later play than the last. The minute I hear her tell him she loves him I'm going to find him and kill him."

"The screen was working. A succession of figures passed and repassed. Julia Rome and John Howe occupied the center most of the time. And now the fascination of the game had begun to take hold of me. Instead of watching the play I watched the lips of the characters. The words they spoke—and I discovered for the first time that they really spoke—seemed quite divorced from the parts that they were playing. But, strive as hard as I might, I could not understand a word.

The man at my side suddenly seized me by the arm again.

"Did you hear? Did you hear?" he whispered. "He's been telling her that he loves her. He's asking her to get a divorce from me."

I stared at the screen. John Howe was in the midst of a furious altercation with Julia Rome, who, posing as his abandoned wife, was clinging to him, begging him to take her back for the sake of the children. He thrust her from him and sent her staggering across the room.

"He's saying that her love for me is dead and that he has loved her since the first day they met," whispered my companion, never relaxing his fierce grasp upon my arm.

The pictures changed. I turned, and though I could hardly see the face of the forty-dollar man, I knew that the crisis of his life was at hand. I heard him breathing hard through his nostrils. And still his fingers gripped my sleeve as if they were steel claws.

Suddenly the grasp relaxed. The man sank back in his place. I watched him; he did not move a muscle. And I wondered at what decision he had arrived. To tell the truth, I had not formed the highest impression of Julia Rome. It did not seem credible to me that a woman of such rare talent and of such beauty would be content with her husband in a little leased two-family house somewhere in the suburban region of the metropolis.

The lights went up again. Now I could see my companion's face. He was trembling and perfectly white.

"Did you hear? No, but of course you couldn't," he muttered. "She told him—she told him that she had never loved anyone but me. She said that she never wanted to see his face again. She said that she was going to leave the stage and return to me."

"Thank God!" I said softly.

"What am I going to do? I am not worthy of her. I do not deserve her forgiveness."

"Forget it," I answered. "You've had a picture play in your own family and haven't known it. That's all. Go home and write to her like a man and ask her pardon."

"I believe you're right," muttered the little man.

He rose and went out. I never saw him again. But, as everyone knows, Julia Rome has not yet renewed her contract.

Accounting for Longevity

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, who lived to be ninety-two years old, vigorous and alert to the end of his long span, gave out, shortly before his death, a few simple rules, observance of which had helped him keep fit: "That I have borne much labor and responsibility without ever suffering even a temporary breakdown seems to me to be due—after the inheritance of a sound constitution—to my possessing a good muscular and nervous system, preserved by open-air exercise and the habit of moderate eating. It may have contributed to the fortunate result that at no time of my life have I ever made habitual use of any nerve stimulant like tea, coffee, tobacco or alcohol, although I have never been a total abstainer from any one of these stimulants except tobacco. When I have taken them it has always been in dilute forms."

Whalebirds Aid Fishers

Great flocks of whalebirds, which have not been observed on Grays harbor for 15 years, according to waterfront workers, are flying about constantly over the tide rips, says a dispatch from Hoquiam, Wash. The salts declare the presence of these birds means something, but just what they are rather undecided, except that where flocks of whalebirds congregate [illegible] schools of small fish, as smelt and salmon trout, are [illegible]. Sayings about the whalebirds presage the coming of a severe winter. These birds are smaller than gulls and assemble in flocks numbering thousands.

Fate Was in the Way

THE lights of Marion's car, shooting up the road, picked up the glint of metal at the distant curve, and the next moment she saw that she was approaching what was evidently a wrecked car. Coming nearer, she pulled her heavy roadster to a stop. Then her headlights brought into sharp relief the figure of a man crumpled just beyond the twisted frame.

She slipped from her car and to his side. He was unconscious. Climbing down to the brook that followed the road, she brought cold water and bathed his face.

"Oh, I remember—the world turned over twice," he muttered.

"This is a bad curve, and the road is icy this time of year," she said. "How do you feel now?" she asked hopefully.

"I—" She felt him relax again into unconsciousness.

"There's just one thing to do," she thought to herself; "that is to take him back home—and that's the last place I want to go!"

Between them and the little wayside station to which she had been speeding there were twenty miles of country, and at the station there would be no possibility of medical aid, while her father was a physician spending the precious end of his vacation at his country home.

She revived the unconscious man, and, using her sturdy self as a crutch, she managed to get him to her car and into it.

"I am sorry to make you so much trouble," he said faintly.

"Never you mind," she said gently, wondering just what he would think if he knew that he had interrupted an elopement, that even now her lover was waiting at the wayside station for her, that the western express would soon be due—

"Why, he's slipped away again," she thought to herself, glancing at him, and, slipping an arm around him and under his head, she sent the car humming homeward.

The house was as dark as when she had left. She sounded her horn, smiling a bit as she realized the dramatic quality of the moment. The door opened and her father came out.

"What? You? Why—what does this mean? And who—an injured man? What does this mean, Marion?" he ejaculated.

"Explanations later, Dad," she said. "Right, Mischief." He started to lift the hurt man from the car. "Great Scott! It's Norman Bradley—my old friend Bradley's son. He had written that he might be out to see us!"

She aided her father, whose swift skill soon made their patient comfortable; and as she glanced at him she made up her mind that she might have done worse than rescue him. But her thoughts were with the lover who had waited her coming in vain.

The next day brought her two unhappy times. In the morning she was called to the telephone, and over the phone came her lover's voice, bitter with accusation.

"But, Beals, I couldn't do otherwise," she urged.

His swift, prolonged reply left her cheeks flushed and her will on fire. As she hung up the receiver her father came near.

"Marion, is that scamp calling you?" he demanded. "And it is perfectly plain that you were planning to join him last night. Now—"

"Dad, let's not argue it! I was. I have tried—tried to forget him, but I love him," she added, weary and unhappy.

He looked at her in silence, then said: "Remember—I forbid you to marry him. You are all that is left that is dear to me," he said simply as she fled.

It was several days later that Norman, walking with her through the autumn-tinted grounds, said suddenly: "Marion, you and your father forgot I was lying in the library when you had your brief conversation about your—or—delayed elopement. It was over before I could warn you I was there. I am really sorry—if you love this chap—that I was fate in the way. I would offer to help you, but I want you myself."

She tingled to the tips of her fingers as his gray, handsome eyes with the tender light in them, so different from the shifting, restless light in Beals' eyes, bent to hers.

"Oh, you do!" she replied. "But suppose I love another—and suppose I have made up my mind to join him just as soon as you depart, and father and I can have the scandal all to ourselves!"

He stopped suddenly, and pity rose in her heart as she saw his face pale. "Marion, if you love him so much, I will help you join him, but you don't know—that moment when I looked up, saw your face over mine, heard your voice—was the beginning." He said no more, his face gray with pain.

She slipped her hand under his arm, and said gently, "Is it as bad as that? Then, let me tell you a secret: Over the phone that morning Beals was so bitter, angry and harsh that something in me died then and there—what I know now was some sort of [illegible] fascination he had [illegible] perhaps [illegible] with you if you try hard, for—for when I held your [illegible] not here—yet—but—one of these days!"

Oakland has a very strong team this year and it is expected to play leading teams in both Penn-sylvania and West Virginia. Mr. Wade H. Hinebaugh, of Oakland, who has been a great fan for some years past, is lending a co-operative hand to the O. H. S. athletic activities and is manager of our basketball team. Dewey Rice is the capable coach.

At the election of officers the following pupils were chosen to hold the school offices of the team: Manager, Mitchell Franklin; captain, Hugh Echard; treasurer, Ralph Blake.

It is with approval and pleasure that we note the co-operative spirit of Mr. Hinebaugh and Mr. Rice, and we thank both for their interest.

We deeply desire that the whole town show its cooperative spirit and interest in our athletics by being present at our "peppy" games.

Come one! Come all! And boost basketball! O. H. S. COM.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION

Malinda Jane Casteel vs. Sylvester S. Casteel.

No. 2715 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii by the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states—

1. That on the 23rd day of April, 1899, the plaintiff was married in Preston county, West Virginia, to the defendant, Sylvester S. Casteel, commonly known as Jacob Sylvester Casteel, with whom she resided as man and wife in Preston county, West Virginia, and Garrett county, Maryland, until about the year 1922.

2. That although the conduct of the plaintiff towards her husband, the said Sylvester S. Casteel, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said Sylvester S. Casteel, while the plaintiff and defendant were living in Garrett county, Maryland, about the year 1922, did without just cause or reason abandon and desert the plaintiff and has declared his intentions to live with her no longer, and such abandonment has continued uninterrupedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation.

3. That the plaintiff and the said defendant, Sylvester S. Casteel, have had eight children born unto them from said marriage, three of whom are of full age and married; three, namely, Lloyd, Goldy and Junior, now residing with their father, the said defendant, and two, Mary and Gladys, both minors, residing with the plaintiff.

4. That the said defendant has provided no support or maintenance for the plaintiff over a long period of time.

5. That the plaintiff has continued to reside in Garrett county, Maryland, since said separation, but the defendant is a non-resident of the State of Maryland, and, the plaintiff is informed, resides for the most part in Canada.

The bill then prayes for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii of the plaintiff from the defendant, for general relief and for an order of publication.

It is thereupon, this 17th day of January, 1927, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, in Equity, that the plaintiff by having a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, Maryland, once in each of three successive weeks before the 19th day of February, 1927, give notice to the said of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to be and appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 7th day of March, 1927, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree should not be passed as prayed.

VOLUME 51. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, JANUARY 27, 1927. NUMBER 49.

TWO KILLED, EIGHT HURT IN LOG TRAIN RUNAWAY

Brakes Failed To Hold Heavily Ladened Cars on Kendall Lumber Road in West Virginia.

Two men were killed and eight injured in a lumber train accident near the Kendall Lumber Company's plant located at a point in West Virginia between Morgantown and Cheat Haven, Pa., early last Thursday morning.

The Dead.

Hubert Butler, 22, single, trackman. Parents live near Kendall Lumber Company's plant.

Charles Perry, 55, married, trackman. Survived by wife and several children, who are living at a point in Pennsylvania.

The Injured.

Edward Sholtz, 49, superintendent of Kendall Lumber Company. Suffering from severe lacerations about the body; internal injuries feared. Taken to Morgantown City Hospital.

Charley Baker, 36, fireman of engine. Suffering from broken leg and severe cuts and bruises; in City Hospital. Baker went to the Kendall plant at Cheat Haven following the closing down of the mill at the same company at Crellin about a year ago.

Sears Johnson, brakeman; Bob C. Champ, brakeman; Jam. Miller, loader; Wm. D. Wilbourn, conductor; John Cole, engineer; James Getz, trackman; Emory DeWitt, trackman, all suffering from painful but not serious injuries and are being treated at their homes at the lumber mill settlement.

One man rode to his death while another jumped to his death when the log train on the Kendall Company's tramway broke away at the top of Pisgah Mountain, raced a mile down the steep grade and finally left the track at a slight curve in the right of way, piling engine and cars in the ditch along the track. Engineer John Cole, who reversed his engine when it became apparent the train was running away, escaped with but minor cuts and bruises, but a trackman, who was riding on the water tank of the locomotive was crushed to death beneath the overturned engine, while the second man to be killed attempted to jump to safety but lost his life.

The wreck occurred about two miles from the bottom of the steep grade leading into the Kendall mill. When the engine pulling six double deck lumber cars and one car filled with props started down the steep incline there were ten persons in board, including the regular train crew and trackmen and the superintendent, Edward Sholtz.

Realizing the situation, the engineer called to the men to jump for their lives.

It was at this time that Hubert Butler who was riding one of the log cars jumped. His body struck some object along the right of way and was hurled back against the moving train. He died almost instantly survivors of the wreck say.

Other members of the party on board the train jumped and escaped with only minor injuries.

Superintendent Sholtz landed in a brush heap and it is believed that this saved his life. The train kept the tracks until it reached a slight curve nearly half way down the mountain. Here the front trucks of the log train failed to hold the tracks and the entire train plied up along the right of way. Perry's body was pinned beneath the overturned engine and it was necessary to dig the body out of the dirt.

A graphic story of the accident was recited Thursday night by Superintendent Sholtz, who was taken to the City Hospital in Morgantown following the accident.

"We started over the top of the mountain and started to descend the steep grade leading to the mill," he said. "The train seemed under control until after the engine had been shifted to the rear and then it began to gather speed. The tighter the brakes were drawn the faster the train seemed to go until I believe the cars were running at least 100 miles an hour. Everything seemed to run together, I mean that woods, brush piles, logs, trees and rocks were piled together so fast was the train traveling. Some jumped while others stayed with the train."

Survivors of the wreck, including the engineer, are said to have attributed slippery rails as the cause of the run away. It was pointed out that when the brakes were applied that the wheels slid and formed a sled causing the train to run faster than if the brakes had not been applied so tightly.

ENROLLMENT AND ATTENDANCE ON THE INCREASE

263,196 Pupils Listed Last Year, According to State Board of Education.

Increased enrollment and better attendance in the public day elementary and secondary schools of Maryland in the year ended June 30, 1926, were reported in the statistics released one day last week by the State Department of Education.

At the end of last June the public schools of Maryland had enrolled 263,196 pupils, an increase of 2,427 over the number in the preceding year. The average enrollment was 241,921 and the average attendance 214,024 in 1926. The increase in average attendance over 1925 was 2,890.

Parochial Schools Cited.

That the increase in attendance was higher than the increase in enrollment suggests that there was more effective enforcement of the compulsory attendance law and greater interest of parents and teachers in good attendance, it was said.

The twenty-three counties had an average daily attendance of 123,200, while Baltimore had only 90,814. The greater amount of the difference was explained by the large number of children in Catholic parochial schools in Baltimore, Albert S. Cook, State Superintendent of Education, said.

Enrollment last year in private and Catholic parochial schools aggregated approximately 27,000 in Baltimore and 6,500 in the counties.

Attendance in Negro Schools.

In 1926 the attendance in schools for colored pupils totaled 15,416 in Baltimore and 20,961 in the counties. The counties' increased attendance in colored schools over the six-year period by 5,166, while the city increased by 5,369. Since the attendance in city schools for Negroes is increasing more rapidly than in county schools, the next decade may show approximately equal numbers of colored pupils attending school in the city and counties, it was said.

The variation in the size of the public school problem in the counties is indicated by the average number of pupils in attendance in each county. When the 1926 public school attendance is compared with that of 1920 an increase of 38,712 is shown over the span of six years. The average yearly increase was 6,452. Every county, with the exception of Carroll and Calvert, shows an increase in enrollment over the six-year period.

Six-Year Increases Shown.

Baltimore City had an increased attendance of 15,344 in 1926 over 1920. Prince George's, Anne Arundel, Allegany, Washington, Montgomery and Baltimore counties showed considerable growth over the period, the increases in the counties ranging from 2,000 to 5,000.

Eleven counties had a decrease in attendance from 1925 to 1926 and the total decreases were:

Talbot	206
Garrett	180
Worcester	137
Calvert	133
Harford	98
Caroline	94
Queen Anne's	85
Somerset	74
Howard	15
St. Mary's	12
Kent	2

In Garrett, Harford, Howard and St. Mary's counties the decrease in attendance was accounted for partly by the increase in Catholic parochial school enrollment.

Stolen Automobile Recovered

The Chevrolet car of Mr. Paul B. Naylor, stolen from in front of the Maryland Theatre in Oakland just before the holidays, was recovered on Saturday at Uniontown, to which place it had been driven and left standing upon a street for several days before it was taken in charge by the officials of that town who placed it in a garage and got into communication with the Maryland automobile commissioner in Baltimore and the ownership of the car established. Mr. Naylor, in company with his brother Arthur motored to Uniontown Saturday, returning to Oakland Sunday with the machine. It had been driven less than a hundred miles following its disappearance, according to the speedometer.

Festival and Oyster Supper.

If you are searching for good eats, come to the festival and oyster supper to be held at the Crellin school house next Saturday, January 29th. The proceeds will go to help cover the expenses for repairs recently made on the church at Crellin. There will be plenty to eat. Everybody come and enjoy the evening. Don't forget the date. A MARYLAND PILGRIMAGE IN FEBRUARY GEOGRAPHIC

Important Role By State In Evolution of Nation Described by Dr. Grosvenor. Editor

The National Geographic Society is a non-commercial, cooperative organization, with headquarters in Washington, D. C. Its officinl publication, The National Geographic Magazine, in its February issue, which went to its subscribers Friday, contains as its leading article "A Maryland Pilgrimage," by Gilbert Grosvenor, LLD., Litt. D., president of the Society.

This article is accompanied by 88 illustrations, including a duotone series of beautiful pictures and a wall map of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, making a comprehensive textual-map-photographic survey of the Old Line State and its environs.

Among the local views reproduced in the magazine is a full page view of Deep Creek Valley, photographed from the top of Paugh's Hill, three miles south of Oakland, showing in the distance a portion of the artificial lake built recently by the Youghiogheny Hydro-Electric Corporation; a view of Muddy Creek Falls, near Oakland; Casselman river bridge near Grantsville near the spot where Braddock's ill-fated army crossed the streamon its march against the French and Indians at Fort DuQuesne, and a view of the National Highway near Keyser's Ridge with the snow at that point piled ten or twelve feet deep which had been removed from the roadway by tractor-plows and other means to afford traffic passage east and west over this important thoroughfare.

The publication of this article with its accompanying map and illustrations, will carry to the 1,150,000 members of the Society, representing every civilized nation, colony, island and mandatory in the world, the story of the Old Line State's hallowed shrines, the part it played in the development of popular government in America, and its diversified and thriving industries of today.

Activities of Women Shown.

In his article, Dr. Grosvenor has described the important role played by the State in the evolution of the nation, including the activities of America's first woman suffragist and the drawing in the State of one of the earliest women juries.

The illustrations in the Maryland article are the cream of thousands taken in a thorough photographic survey of the State.

Dr. Grosvenor has a country home at "Wild Acres" in Montgomery county, which is a bird paradise, holding Audubon Society and U. S. Biological Survey records for the greatest number of land birds nesting in one acre adjacent to any house in the United States.

As president of the National Geographic Society, Dr. Grosvenor has developed that organization to the largest scientific and educational body in the world. It is solely supported by the dues of its members, which dues enable it not only to publish its world famous National Geographic Magazine, but also to send forth numerous exploration and scientific expeditions and to carry on its extensive educational work.

Because the National Geographic Magazine is more frequently bound than any other periodical, and its volumes are to be found in practically all public libraries in America, and in reference libraries all over the world, the Maryland article is assured a permanent place in thousands of libraries and tens of thousands of the homes of the nation and world.

The Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia map represents the most recent issue of some 12,625,000 wall maps in color distributed among the society's members, in addition to numerous sketch maps which accompany articles in the National Geographic Magazine.

BILLS AFFECTING GARRETT COUNTY ARE PRESENTED

Mr. Naylor Would Enlarge Jurisdiction of J. P.'s—Mr. Green Opposes Second Term Officer

Annapolis, Jan. 26.—Seafood conservation came sharply to the fore in the General Assembly today, with the introduction in both Senate and House of identical measures looking to protection of Chesapeake Bay resources. The House committee on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries also met this afternoon, when the administration's conservation measure was given its first public hearing.

The conservation bills of today deal with inspection taxes, the maximum size of scoops, reserved areas, the necessity of Baltimore City oystermen giving bond, and other regulatory provisions. They were introduced in the Senate by Ambrose J. Kennedy, of the Second City District, and in the House of Delegates by Frank F. J. Daily, of the Third Baltimore District.

Another outstanding feature of the day's session was acceptance by the House of an unfavorable committee report on a resolution introduced in the House last week by Delegate John L. Bardoff, of Charles County which would have given each legislator $50 additional compensation for meals. The resolution was defeated in the rules committee, one to four.

Would Advertise State.

Creation by Governor Ritchie of a "Maryland State Advertising Commission," consisting of five members with the object of publicizing the state's resources, were asked in a joint resolution introduced in the Senate by Senator W. Earl Withgott, of Talbott County.

Stating that Maryland had splendid agricultural, industrial, and maritime resources, that continually present new opportunities for development of the state and its residents, the resolution points out that other states, and cities have found it desirable to advertise their resources and advantages. The object would be to attract more residents, together with new commercial and industrial enterprises. The commission would serve without compensation, and report to the next Legislature.

Provision for jury trial of persons charged with indirect contempt of court, and clarification of the right of appeal in all such cases, is sought by Senator Harry O. Levin, of the Fourth City District.

Wants Official Stenographers.

Judges of the Fourth Judicial Circuit would be empowered to appoint one official court stenographer for the Washington County Circuit Court and one for the Circuit courts of Allegany and Garrett counties, under a bill presented in the Senate by William A. Gunter, of Allegany County.

Other bills introduced in the Senate today included:

A measure by Senator Kennedy, providing for the perpetual succession of all banks, savngis institutions and trust companies incorporated under the laws of Maryland.

Where a warrant is obtained to survey vacant or eschew land, the person holding the warrant shall pay the assessed value of similar land in the same section, under the provisions of still another bill drawn up by Mr. Kennedy.

Senator A. Roy McCardell, of Frederick County, presented a bill which would exempt from state taxation any property of the Lowts Orphan Asylum, of Frederick City, so long as the property is used for asylum and school purposes. A second measure by Mr. McCardell would enable the Frederick County commissioners to borrow $32,000 for road and bridge repairs.

Would Raise Salaries.

Senator William A. Gunter, of Allegany county, threw more bills into the hopper. One would repeal the general laws under attachments of wages or hire, as applied to his county. Under the provisions of another, the judges of the Orphans' Court of Allegany County would receive $5.00 compensation for each court day; while provisions also is made for the days when these judges shall assemble. Another bill by Senator Gunter seeks to increase, from $600 to $1,200, the salary of the clerk to the Allegany County Board of Commissioners. The office now pays $1,800 annually.

Garrett County Measures.

A bill by Senator Alonzo D. Naylor, of Garrett County, seeks to give to the justices of peace in that county, jurisdiction in all cases involving accounts where the amounts do not exceed $200.

In addition to the oyster measures, bills introduced in the House of Delegates is one by Arthur H. Green, which would make the Garrett county treasurer ineligible to succeed himself.

Delegate Louis Kevfauver introduced one to amend the charter of the Grangers Mutual Fire Insurance of Frederick county.

The manner in which automobile, motor trucks and other motor vehicles are sold on the installment plan, conditional contract sale, or other deferred payment plan, would be limited under a bill introduced by Delegate Frederick Lee Coburn, of Harford county. The measure also would regulate the procedure by which any such vehicle could be retaken from the buyer, and provides for the resale of the machine.

POSTOFFICE AT KEMPTON LOOTED BY SAFE-BLOWERS

Robbery Occurred At An Early Hour Yesterday Morning—No Clew To Identity of Thieves

Garrett county officials, who were called to Kempton yesterday morning following the discovery that the postoffice there had been robbed at an early hour, searched the mountains in the vicinity of the mining town all day and well along in the evening in hopes of discovery the identity of the robbers and taking them in charge, failed and returned to town.

Kempton is located at the headwaters of the Potomac River in Garrett county, more than twenty miles south of Oakland, and at the State line between Maryland and West Virginia.

It is believed that the loot obtained by the burglars was small. Two registered letters, one containing $145 and the other $20, were found by a schoolboy near the postoffice, they having been dropped by the robbers, it is surmised.

The postoffice at Kempton is located in the store of the Buxton-Landstreet Company, in which building is also located the offices of the Davis Coal and Coke Company, the manager of which, W. S. Cunningham, notified Sheriff Casteel in Oakland, who, with a posse and two blood-hounds went to Kempton immediately and took up the trail of the robbers, who used a heavy charge of nitro-glycerine to blow the safe, the force of the explosion wrecking the interior of the postoffice.

Louis Duling, a clerk employed in the store of the coal company, told the officers making the investigation that he heard an explosion about 12:30 o'clock yesterday morning but paid no attention to it.

Postmaster Robert Schell of Kempton, is unable to estimate the amount of money and stamps taken, but he is under the impression that they received very little for their work.

MARRIED.

Heitz-Hinebaugh

A quiet wedding was solemnized Monday evening at 5 o'clock at the rectory of the church of the Immaculate Conception, Clarksburg, W. Va., when the Rev. Father William C. O'Connell united Miss Helen Hinebaugh and James P. Heitz in marriage. Bernard T. Heitz and Miss Patrica Heitz, brother and sister of the bridegroom were the attendants. The bride was gowned in dark blue crepe with brocaded overblouse and wore a close fitting white felt cloche. Miss Heitz wore crepe with touches of rose and a rose shaded felt hat.

Following the ceremony the bride and bridegroom returned to the home of the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Susan Heitz, South Seventh street, where a wedding supper was served in a color scheme of yellow and orchid. Yellow candles in orchid holders burned on the tables. Yellow jonquils and iris was carried out in the floral note.

Mr. Heitz and his bride arrived in Oakland Tuesday evening where they will be the guests of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hinebaugh, for a few days. Upon their return to Clarksburg they will take up their residence in a newly furnished apartment at No. 777½ West Pike street.

The bridegroom is a cutter at the Adamston Flat Glass Company and his bride has been a stenographer in the office of the same company for two years. Mrs. Heitz is a graduate of the Oakland high school and also of the Mountain State Business College, Parkersburg, W. Va. and Mr. Heitz attended the high school at Arnold, Pa.

SECOND COMMUNITY SALE TO OCCUR FEBRUARY 9

Oakland Merchants Arranging For Another Sale Similar to One Held In December

C. N. McIntire, Lawrence Fraley and I. R. Rudy, managing committee of the community sales of the Oakland Business Men's Association, have announced that the second community sale, in which practically every merchant in town will take part, will occur on Wednesday, February 9th, beginning with the opening of business that day and continuing all through the business hours.

The merchants joining in this sale will have the privilege of advertising one or two articles at special prices to be effective that day and that every one joining in the effort will have sufficient of the advertised article to supply all demands.

A page advertisement announcing the sale will appear in The Republican next Thursday. A solicitor, appointed by the sales committee, will call upon the merchants of town tomorrow at which time the committee requests that each advertiser have his or her advertisement written and ready for delivery to the solicitor.

Oakland's first community sale was a huge success and it is the desire of every one interested to make the coming one no less a success.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

Will be Entertained at the Maryland Theatre Tomorrow Night

Harry B. Kight, traveling passenger agent of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, will give an illustrated lecture to Garrett Lodge, Knights of Pythias tomorrow evening at the Maryland Theatre.

The lecture is illustrated by a moving picture which was produced by the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and was taken along its right-of-way between Parkersburg, West Va., and Washington, D. C., and includes scenes of interest in the Capitol City. It is of an hour's duration and promises to be of interest to the entire membership of the organization.

Mr. Kight is well and favorably known in Oakland and it was through his efforts that the picture was procured for this showing.

At the time the program committee of the lodge arranged for the picture it was decided to show it in the lodge room, but upon an invitation extended by the management of the theatre arrangements were changed in order to make a theatre party of the affair. The entire membership of the lodge will be admitted without charge to the theatre upon this occasion, and at the same time it will afford everybody an opportunity to see the picture and hear the lecture by Mr. Kight.

Other Notes Of Interest.

Last Friday evening brought one of the largest attended meetings of Garrett Lodge since the attendance contest was inaugurated. The "Bears" showed a gain on the "Bulls," but the count shows the "Bulls" are still in the lead.

After the regular session of lodge, Mr. F. E. Rathbun, who was chairman of the program committee for the evening, made an address of welcome to the visitors and introduced those who participated in the program.

Mr. Richard Browning, district game warden, displayed a collection of relicks which came down through the Browning family from Meshaek Browning, a pioneer settler in what was then Allegany county, now Garrett county, and to whom all historians of Garrett county refer, because it was he who was an outstanding character during the periodd of the early life of this section.

A very interesting number and one that was thoroughly enjoyed by those present was the rendition of readings by Miss Emily Eisenberg, of Lonaconing, a winner in the Tasker G. Lowndes Declamation Contest, and Miss Louise Browning, of Kitzmiller, winner of the Fraley Declamation contest in Garrett county last year.

The title of the program for last Friday night was "A Peep Into The History of Garrett County," and to make the program complete, "Uncle Billy" Browning, aged 92 years, accompanied by his fiddlers were present and played a long list of the old-time melodies. "Uncle Billy" also gave a sketch of events which happened during the early days in this section of the country, and recalled many interesting happenings which his audience received with a great deal of pleasure.

TELLS OF PLAN TO MAKE HANCOCK NATION CAPITAL

Was Proposed in Congress When Location of Government Seat Was Much Mooted Question

Location of the seat of government of the United States at a point convenient of access to all portions of the country, was a much-mooted question among our National legislators following the signing of the treaty between the United States and England at the close of the struggle of the colonies for independence.

And how many of you know that a site "within 30 miles of Hancock, Md." was seriously proposed for the Capital of the United States?

In a recent address bearing on the history of the National Capital, Congressman Frederick N. Zihlman, an assiduous student of history, tells in detail of the origin of the residence movement and of the competition of States for the National Capital.

Was to Be on Navigable River.

The legislators and Congress, Congressman Zihlman stated, decided that the permanent residence of the National Capital was to be central as to position and territory; that it was to be on a navigable river, and that the jurisdiction of the Federal government was to be supreme.

This was in 1783. Congressman Zihlman said, when transportation was difficult and slow. In these days the National spirit was still feeble and the Confederate of States looked as though it might fly to pieces at any moment.

"Kingston, N. Y.,' he said, "decided to ask the House, the Congress of the United States, to come and reside in their town. On March 14, of the same year, the State Legislature passed a measure authorizing any town or municipality in the State to cede for Federal purposes. This was done and a site one mile square was set aside.

"William Floyd and Alexander Hamilton petitioned the Federal government to make it two miles square, instead of one.

Annapolis Makes Bid.

"On May 12, 1783, Annapolis adopted a resolution, reciting that it had knowledge that the Congress should have a fixed place of abode. Two days later, a meeting of citizens was called and 300 acres including the State House and Public Circle was offered and set aside for the home of the Federal Government.

"New Jersey and Virginia followed with various offers. Congress had been meeting in various places—in Philadelphia, in Trenton, then at Princeton, Baltimore, Lancaster and York.

"Southern members favored a site on the Potomac River. The Northern members, however, favored a site near the falls of the Delaware, above Trenton, and a resolution to this effect was passed.

"In consideration of the Southern members, a resolution was provided for two capitals—one at the falls of the Delaware, and another at or near the rivers of the Potomac. Finally, in 1787, the House sent to the Senate a bill naming a site near the falls of the Susquehanna. Debate on this bill consumed the entire halance of the session, and during which reference was made to the establishment of the National Capital in Western Maryland, 'within 30 miles of Hancock.'

Hancock Suggested for Capital.

"It was one of several amendments introduced but was quickly disposed of. But the location, it was pointed out, gave a significance and importance, as it undoubtedly furnished another indication of the tendency away from a Southern location, as well as a purpose to gratify the three states of Pennsylvania, Virginia and Maryland.

"It is also interesting as being the most advanced Western point that wa voted upon during the entire discussion. For Hancock lies in the narrow strrip of Maryland between the Pennsylvania and Virginia state lines. It is 39 miles east of Cumberland, the latter being 146 miles from the city of Washington.

" 'Within 30 miles of Hancock,' Congressman Zihlman said, "The new Federal district could have been wholly located within the state lines of Pennsylvania at about the same latitude as that of Chambersburg and Bedford. Or, it could have been placed within the territory of the three states or in either Maryland or Virginia."

But, as said before, the amendment failed of approval. It was finally decided that the site on the Potomac later known as the District of Columbia, became the choice of the majority of Congress, the National Government moving there from Philadelphia.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Prepared Especially for Readers of The Republican by Rev. U. S. Wright, D. D.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 30, 1927.

THE CHRISTIAN OVERCOMING TEMPTATION.

Luke 4:1-13; I. Cor. 10:12, 13.

In that he himself being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted.—Hebrews 2:18.

THE BATTLERS.

"Belgium lost her territory, but saved her soul." That was a familiar bit of phrasing during the World War. It is equally as expressive of the individual, for he too must fight for his soul. There are no ideals that do not have to do battle for existence, no aspirations that do not have to struggle their way to achievements. Upon the plains of the spirit are fought the realest battles the world knows and this lesson tells the story of one such conflict waged in the tremendously human life of our Lord. Always a picture in speech He gave this graphic description to His disciples, perhaps among the rugged fastnesse of Hermon, perhaps about some quiet campfire when under the witchery of its blaze there was the unfolding of confidences that went into the secret springs of conduct. Matthew's order is likely to be the truer one though there is such intertwining of the inner urge that one is as much fact as the other. They both are reproducing the wonderfully vivid story recounted by Jesus in some explanation of the course He was pursuing. Whatever else one may say we are watching the soul of a real man attempt to find its way in the perplexities of conscious power. There is no need to visualize the scene as the Oriental mind demands, and picture two great figures arrayed against one another. The thing Jesus described is familiar to each of us and the striking statement is that our Lord identified our impulses to accept compromises, to yield to the tug of self-interest as Satanic things. "You Satan!" He cried to Peter when he protested against the acceptance of the cross and used his warm affection as a lever to change the direction of Christ's journeyings, whate'er one's belief about the devil outside he can have no quarrel over the grim reality of the struggle within who would throne selfishness and crown lust as lords over his life. And it is here that truest kingliness is wrought out.

THE DAY.

Jesus had quietly followed the tasks of Joseph and had cared for the family in Nazareth. There came a time when His immediate work was no longer needed for their support, and the steady thinking over the riotous feelings of the day that swept many into the fellowship of zealot bands, committed to the overthrow of Rome, leaped eagerly to accept the movement about the Jordan of which John was the center as the one sure road to the Kingdom all desired. He left the shop and listening to the fervid eloquence of the desert leader He prayed His way into the water to give Himself to its following. Suddenly there was the illumination of His spiritual instincts and He heard within the clear voice saying: "This is my Son." He had thought John was the Messiah, hut now He had His own call and that elation of spirit carried Him into the wilderness to settle the consequences of this new consciousness of the destinies of leadership. The call was perfectly clear; what shoulld be done with its acceptance, which was immediate and eager, raised other puzzling questions that must have settlement before He faced His task among the crowds. There were a number of courses open for Him. For more than a month there was such intent thinking that all measure of time was lost. Indeed it is quite possible that "forty" is a pictorial representation of an unknown procession of days as "Satan" may be that of inner impulses. To gain a following was a perfectly simple matter, but to lead in the direction of righteousness is quite a different proposal. He must bring the Kingdom of Heaven into the life of earth and any man who attempts it today must face the hitterest opposition. Take the question of a warless world, certainly part of the Kingdom dream for the race. Riots on the campus and newspaper pillories without have heen the part of some students who proclaimed their refusal to bear a rifle against an alien. The World Court has gone glimmering for all the United States is concerned. China is getting from Christian nations by riot and armies what she could not secure by appeals to a sense of justice. Big navy advocates, military training in schools and other adventures in making a military mind are all to be met by the weaponless warrior. It merely indicates the difficulty of the decisions forced upon Jesus by His consciousness of the place He must fill.

THE DECISION.

He could throw up the whole affair and go back to the shop where He could have bread in abundance as a fruit of His well-done work. He could make Himself the center of the profitable enterprise of enlisting men to follow the way of their desire and exploit them for His own advantage. It is a not unheard of thing in this year of our Lord, 1927. But selfishness could not rule the Kingdom and such alluring proposals were east aside. He could try the political road to power that would be beneficial to all it controlled. All that would be necessary was to swing in with the stirring spirit of rebellion abroad in many provinces beside Judea and Galilee and the resultant larger good would make men forget all the injustice of the method. Senate seats may be secured in more than one way. Patriotism covers a multitude of oils. But the Kingdom would vanish by the method of its attainment. Or there could be the swift, spectaculer enlisting of the masses in the enterprise. This advertising age knows fully how a Hall-Mills case ensures notoriety for the participants and head-lines across a continent that never could be purchased by decent living. Many a broken home owes its ruin to the head-liner of lust instead of fidelity. There is an itch for the bruited name and the fact that Jesus had to fight to keep it out of His program makes Him comrad with every modern. For these battles are being staged on every street in America this hour.

How did He win through? There was the keeping of the spirit of consecration that had been His at the Jordan. He was led of the Spirit through these fighting days and He emerged in the "power of the Spirit" after they were over. He sought the counsel of the living Word wrought out from the life of yesterday. He who keeps close to the spirit of the Bible has sure quickening of his perceptions of the way. There is no mention made of prayer, but knowing the habit of Jesus it could not have been omitted in this hour and He who would find his road in the midst of modern perplexities and will make his decisions in the light of his hour of highest spiritual reach, of the illumined pages of God's working in the past, and in the full sense of the Father's presence need not fear the result.

"PLENTY OF ROOM AT THE TOP."

By F. F. CORLISS.

"The young lawyer told Daniel Webster that he thought their profession was overcrowded and asked his advice. Mr. Webster replied, 'There is plenty of room at the top.'

"This apt phrase, Sam, touches us all, in every vocation. The man who won the Jewett prize of ten thousand dollars for the best automobile name went to the top over the heads of a million competitors. The name he coined is, 'Built to win—without, within.' A very simple, jingling catchy phrase but fraught with much meaning, because it makes a unique advertisement and has a sales value. It will lead many buyers to think the car is so, whether or no. The difficult thing always looks easy after someone has done it or shown us how to do it."

"I tell you what I think, Doc. Success is the result of hard thinking or hard work. It seldom comes as a prize package in a ten thousand dollar windfall. The greatest trouble with the rising generation, they are money mad. They have the frenzied finance influenza and it is very contagious. We have too many who do not wish to go to the top by legal, deserving and honorable methods. They prefer to work underground, to tunnel through and tap the bank vault at the bottom by use of virtuous and altruistic sophistry, for tools. There are too many who want something for nothing and are unscrupulous about their methods of getting.

"This deplorable trait in character shows itself in various ways. It may be in false weights and measures, fraudulent stocks, an unfair wage or salary or in a disloyal inefficient service. But there is always a hidden cheat in their way of getting to the top."

"You are quite right, Sam. But right is bound to rule in the end. Society always holds fifty-one per cent of our stock in virtue, honor, honesty and justice, or we would all go to the demnition how-wows, if you know where that is."

"Now, for instance, Doc, just consider the girls of today and how they are coming past the speed limit. Of course, I don't inelude all of them, as I know there are some girls not yet called gold-diggers to count on. Girls who marry one of their own set, their own age, who have motherly instincts, who wish to be home builders and not house managers. Now the ideals these girls have of how to reach that room at the top—I mean the modern high speeders—is to reject the hard-working, honest young men they might love truly for rich old skates whom they can never love. This type of girl will marry the old man twenty years her senior if he has the money, is half decent in his appearance and don't eat with his knife or gurgle his soup."

"I know they do it, Sam, but why? I never could understand the psychology of it; it seems so unnatural."

"That's just it, Doe; there's no psychology in it. These girls leave their souls out of the deal entirely; probably never read psychology.

"These young women we are speaking of have what I call a spider web brain—full of vacant spaces where there should be gray matter with deep convolutions. A woman's overpowering vanity, love of display, flattering attentions and her desire for life's luxuries will lead her into strange company and to do strange things.

"They are natural born social climbers, long for the lime-light, want to be it, and they fool themselves by thinking that the old skates gold dust will do the trick, whereas they lack true merit and the real accomplishments which alone carry one to the room at the top. Now when they fail of reaching the top chagrin, humiliation and unhappiness is their lot."

"Well, Sam, I've hardly ever been in sight of the top, but I know the one right way—the rules of the game as applied to boys and young men particularly. I got them straight from dad when I first left home to go it alone.

" 'Now, my boy,' he said, 'there are a few little things that are well for you to know if you want to get on in this world and be a success. Don't waste your employer's time; work for his interests and you work best for your own. Whatever you are given to do, do it the best you know how with head, heart and hand. Strive to make the thing a little better, quicker or at a lower cost than the other fellow and don't be afraid to work overtime. Your employer has an all-seeing eye, remember. Above all, be honorable, honest, truthful and just with all men. Make money, save some, but never take a dollar that you cannot get honestly.'

"So I have struggled along down here below with the common herd; kept a clear, clean conscience and been happy, thought I have never breathed the thin air of the high altitudes where the social and financial aristocracy live at the top.

"The young lawyer thought he could step into high fees from the footstool of his low legal abilities—a thought characteristic of us all when young—and Mr. Webster, in a phrase, showed him that only great learning and achieved distinction as an advocate eliminated competition and resulted in great profits."

"I quite agree with you, Doc. Some may dispute and disagree with your logic, but they can't disqualify it. I have always contended that the main thing we are here for is to make a life, not merely a living, and that wisdom and experienee are life's objective. They have a cumulative, eternal value, become the only asset that we can store up in our subconscious minds and carry over into a new and higher existence. Life in that room at the top is what we all aspire for. Some work for it consciously and with wisdom aforethought, others blunder along thoughtlessily, blindly believing that some one will carry life's burdens for them and thus help them to the top.

"In this world of tangible and visible things there are not two of us who see things quite alike. On the mind's recording disc are registered different effects. So it is not strange that we differ as to the nature and meaning of that greater life at the top, which is always invisible to the child, the novice and the mind untrained to reason, and to prject its power, to search and see.

As man enlarges his physical strength, his power to lift and to work, by the use of mechanical levers, by use of steam and electricity, so he gains knowledge of the life invisible and extends his mental vision.

"Nature is rich in life, profuse in living things that the normal man, unaided, can not see, hear or handle. But the scientific mind, aided by the telescope, electroscope, microscope, spectrum, x-ray and radiant energy and other devices, has opened to man's view and understanding at the top of life's ladder a wondrous world of life fraught with wisdom and design, that the man at the bottom of the ladder scoffs at and calls visionary, because his capacity to comprehend is undeveloped."

"I'll tell you what I believe, Sam, and there is plenty of evidence in nature and the anatomy of man to sustain me. It is this: We have all been born, gifted with the same infinite and eternal life and with the same potential possibilities for reaching the top. But one lifetime of seventy years is insufficient for so great an accomplishment. There is no other way to account for our great mental prodigies and for the vast difference between the illiterate man of low desires and the wise and benevolent man at the top.

"Time and the way we have improved our use of it and the number of embodiments we have outworn in gathering life's experience give the answer."

"I hope you are right, Doc, as I hate to think of leaving this beautiful world and never come back."

"Well, Sam, we've had a good chat, regardless of who's right or who's wrong. What say we have a little nip of the o-be-joyful and turn in for the night."

GRANDMOTHER.

(The following lines were composed by Howard Robinson, of Gettysburg, Pa., and dedicated to his maternal grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth Hinebaugh, of Oakland, and are printed in The Republican by request of a member of Mrs. Hinebaugh's family.)

In the midst of my meditating
Comes a vision to me most fair,
Of my grandmother, tender and loving,
A-smoking in her chair.

A-smoking? Yes, a-smoking,
Her pipe of aged briar,
And a rag rug she's a-knitting
As she sits there by the fire.

As she sits, no doubt she is dreaming
Of days now long since past;
In her thoughts old scenes keep rising
As she reviews from first to last.

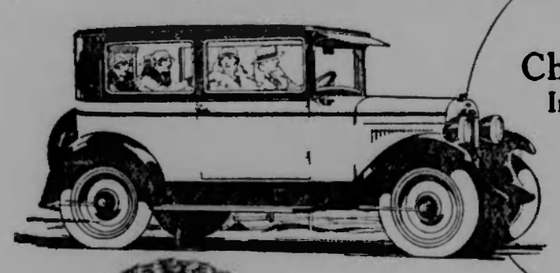
At her mind's door comes a knocking
And she opes to let come in
One whose presence has long been lacking,
Though her thoughts are still with him.

Comes the scenes of the days of the courting—
Those happiest days of youth;
And then comes the day of the wedding,
Preceding their life of truth.

She thinks of Etta's coming,
And the first joys of mother-love,
And of the nine more babes so shining
She brought down from the world above.

Then once again she is moulding
Her embryonic stars
That God has placed in her keeping
To protect from all earthly sears.

Then her thoughts must take a turning
And come to these present days.
Where she views with a mixed feeling
Her now long grown-up babes.



Tnree of the ten are now missing,
And for them she mourns onee again,
But she's cheered as she hears them singing
And sees them watching her clan.

Then to the seven remaining
She needs must turn her thoughts,
And she knows that each is succeeding
But in different ways and lots.

Thus she ends her dreaming
And relaxes with hope and faith
That God in His final reckoning,
With her loved ones will find her a place.

And when God above is considering
Her life midst His human pile,
What can there be hut rejoicing
For a life that was most worth while.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION

Malinda Jane Casteel vs. Sylvester S. Casteel.

No. 2715 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii by the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states—

1. That on the 23rd day of April, 1899, the plaintiff was married in Preston county, West Virginia, to the defendant, Sylvester S. Casteel, commonly known as Jacob Sylvester Casteel, with whom she resided as man and wife in Preston county, West Virginia, and Garrett county, Maryland, until about the year 1922.

2. That although the conduct of the plaintiff towards her husband, the said Sylvester S. Casteel, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, the said Sylvester S. Casteel, while the plaintiff and defendant were living in Garrett county, Maryland, about the year 1922, did without just cause or reason abandon and desert the plaintiff and has declared his intentions to live with her no longer, and such abandonment has continued uninterrupedly for at least three years and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation

3. That the plaintiff and the said defendant, Sylvester S. Casteel, have had eight children born unto them from said marriage, three of whom are of full age and married; three, namely, Lloyd, Goldy and Junior, now residing with their father, the said defendant, and two, Mary and Gladys, both minors, residing with the plaintiff.

4. That the said defendant has provided no support or maintenance for the plaintiff over a long period of time.

5. That the plaintiff has continued to reside in Garrett county, Maryland, since said separation, but the defendant is a non-resident of the State of Maryland, and, the plaintiff is informed, resides for the most part in Canada.

The bill then prayes for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii of the plaintiff from the defendant, for general relief and for an order of publication.

It is thereupon, this 17th day of January, 1927, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, in Equity, that the plaintiff by having a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, Maryland, once in each of three successive weeks before the 19th day of February, 1927, give notice to the said of the object and substance of this bill, warning him to be and appear in this Court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 7th day of March, 1927, to show cause, if any he has, why a decree should not be passed as prayed.

RITCHIE AND THE PRESIDENCY

Taking Governor Ritchie of Maryland and his plea for States' rights as enunciated upon various occasions by the Chief Executive of Maryland as its text, the Birmingham Age-Herald, leader in thought in the section of the South where it is published, pours no balm of hope upon the political aspirations of the thrice-elected Governor when it said in a recent issue:

Beginning his third term as governor of Maryland, and no doubt with an eye on the democratic presidential nomination in 1928, Albert Cabel Ritchie makes an eloquent plea for state rights. The subject would not have assumed such importance in the eyes of Governor Ritchie if he were not one of the most outspoken and militant anti-prohibitionists in the United States, a recognized contender with Governor Al Smith of New York as the national leader of the wet forces.

Federal centralization, in the opinion of Governor Ritchie, menaces the rights of the several states, and so it does, but not in the way he sees it in this statement:

> If you let the inherent and historical character of your government change; if you let the states yield their vitality and become anaemic and dependent things; if you look on while centralization breeds its bureaucrats, its petty tyranny and its incompetency; if unprotestingly you stand by while the rights of citizenship are confiscated; then do not say the fault lies in the stars when liberty and equality of opportunity fade and tolerance bids the land farewell.

A fine bit of oratory, but like a great deal of high-sounding talk, it starts from a false promise. Bureaucracy, the centralization of authority in the federal government, has no connection, properly speaking, with the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act. Prohibition was not forced on the country by federal ukase, as Mr. Ritchie seems to think. It was adopted by the states whose rights he defends.

Not only did the Eighteenth Amendment have the approval of three-fourths of the states before it became a part of the organic law of the nation, but before approximately two-thirds of the population of the country was already living under dry laws of one kind or another. In fact, prohibition began with the states and culminated in the federal government.

States' rights are not involved in prohibition, but if it could be proved that they are involved, sumptuary was voluntarily yielded by the states to the federal government. Nowhere is the state rights doctrine more firmly adhered to in the South, and yet the South is the dryest part of the Union andwas largely instrumental in adding the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Another newspaper, also published in the South, takes this view of Mr. Ritchie's candidacy for the presidency:

The candidacy of Mr. Ritchie for president is hardly taken seriously by the people of the country. The Governor was able to make good use of the presidential proposition in his campaign for a third term for Governor, but his catering to the wet element of Baltimore City is the very thing that disgusts the voters of the nation. The Governor has made the same speech so many times on States' Rights that he puts more store by it than anybody else. It is rather strange that Governor Ritchie never raised his voice on this question until he raised it in behalf of the outlawed liquor traffic. He was a lawyer of some prominence for years in Baltimore City, has been in political life for a dozen years, but he said nothing about encroachments of the Federal Government on any other matter. Back of it all is the fact that he is wet and his advocacy of States' Rights ought not to deceive any thinking man or woman.

INSTALMENT BUYING.

The Portland Oregonian has concluded a widespread investigation as to the results of instalment buying, seeking information from bankers and various economic and business authorities. It seems to be the general opinion that this plan of buying has increased production and made for general prosperity, and that it has come to stay. But the majority of those queried felt that it had increased the purchase of luxuries and had reduced the amount of money available for investment.

Instalment buying at least encourages people to buy substantial things. It may be that a large amount of money which was formerly frittered away in foolish trifles is now being saved for important purchases. When people feel inclined to waste 50 cents or a dollar or more on some trivial thing, they must often be deterred by the thought that they have certain payments to make for a certain thing, and if they do not make the payments agreed upon, they may lose the thing they are working for.

Some of these people are finding out for the first time that they can set aside certain sums of money for certain purposes, and this ought to encourage them to save money.

Of course, under such a plan, there is always the chance that if people anticipate their desires too far ahead, they may at some future time have to cut down on their ordinary purchases, owing to the debts they owe, which would tend to restrict business in many lines.

It would be a fine thing if the instalment purchasers, when they agree to pay so much down for some comfort or enjoyment, would also set out to pay some regular sum into a savings account. In that way the capital of the country will keep increasing and the ability of the people to have the things they desire will be maintained.

The Message To Nicaragua

(From The Washington Post)

The true policy of the United States in dealing with its sister republics was expressed yesterday by President Coolidge in receiving the Minister from Nicaragua. He said:

> Although American forces have, with the consent and at the request of your government, been landed in order to safeguard the legitimate interests of the United States and the lives and property of its citizens, this state of affairs should not continue longer than is necessary. The United States, as I konw your government and the people of Nicaragua fully appreciate, has no selfish ends or imperialistic designs to serve. Least of all have we any desire to influence or dictate in any way the internal affairs of your country. The United States desires the independence and the prosperity of every Central American republic.

This constitutes a declaration of the intent and purpose of the United States government. It is not mere personal opinion, not even the personal opinion of the President. It is binding upon every American, whether he is a private citizen or sits in Congress or upon the bench of the Supreme Court. It has behind it not only the will of the present government of the United States, but the settled will of the American people, as expressed for more than a hundred years.

Nicaragua's independence is in the hands of its own people. The United States, for its own sake as well as for the sake of Nicaragua, will not permit the republic to be destroyed. It will neither interfere with Nicaragua's independence nor permit any other government to interfere with it.

The cynical opinion is held in Europe, and is shared by many Americans, that the United States has imperialistic designs in Central America. The whole history of the United States belies this opinion. From the time when Central and South American republics began their struggle for independence until the present day the United States has sustained them and befriended them. No people achieving their independence have ever been molested by the United States.

The marines now in Nicaragua will be withdrawn in due time, and the independence of Nicarauga will remain and endure. So long as the United States is strong and true to the spirit of its founders the republic of Nicargua is safe against foreign aggression, including aggression from its neighbors.

THE CIVILIZING FORCE.

According to one conception, the love of money is the root of all evil; according to another, it is one of the great principles that move the world. It is not deniable that love of money leads to the commission of many crimes. On the other hand what would be the material and moral state of the world were there no passion for wealth? We should have few of the comforts and conveniences that are now available to most of us if most of the people were indifferent to money; did not care greatly for it or for the things that are to be had in exchange for it.

All the great discoveries in science and every one of the great inventions that have been made might have been brought forth if nobody cared for money. But they would not have been turned to account. Knowledge is useful only when employed to the general advantage. If there were no love of money there would be no incentive to engage in the manufacture and distribution of the great mass of devices that have become necessities to us.

People would be born, struggle along through a space of time to secure a bare living and die. They might or they might not be concerned about a future state. Whether or not they were, they would be kept as busy as we are finding the things they required. And they would be in the quest of money. Primitive civilization was more brutal than ours is. In the process of refinement through which he has passed during the successive centuries man has denounced as criminal behavior that which could not be condemned in earlier times because it seemed to be necessary for individual preservation.

In the pursuit of money today there is a minimum of injustice. At any rate everybody gets a chance to secure a share of the general store of wealth, usually enough for his needs, and at the same time may enjoy the fruits of intelligence and industry. More, everybody who works for money nowadays makes a contribution to the common welfare.

Oakland High School Notes.

Last Friday afternoon the O. H. S. was favored by the presence of the declamation winners of Allegany and Garrett counties. They were Miss Emilie Eisenberg and Mr. Billy Sloan, of Central High School, Lonaconing, and Miss Louise Browning, of Kitzmiller, Garrett county. The readers gave their declamations to an enthusiastic and appreciative audience. A large number of visitors from Oakland and vicinity were present. The title of Miss Browning's recitation was "How the LaRue Stakes Were Lost." Miss Eisenberg recited "Mrs. Rastus Johnson at the Wedding," and Mr. Sloan, "The Old Man." The music between the selections was furnished by Sarah Stanton at the piano and Wilmer Brown playing the accordeon.

After the program, Prof. Smith, principal of Central High School, Lonaconing, spoke to us about athletics. His speech was interesting and beneficial to all.

ALLEGANY TEACHERS FAVOR RETIREMENT BILL

Legislature Will Be Asked To Pass Measure Giving Pension

At a special meeting of the teachers of Allegany county, held in the Union street school at Cumberland, Friday afternoon, January 14th, they unanimously endorsed the proposed state retirement bill for teachers to be presented at this session of the Legislature. The bill was explained by Superintendent Edwin W. Broome, of Montgomery county, chairman of the state committee which has the bill in charge, and by George D. Buck, of New York, noted acturial expert on teacher retirement systems.

It was stated at the meeting that men and women of character, intelligence and devotion to the cause of education may be willing to teach our youth at a low compensation, but it is too much to expect such teachers to face old age and disability without adequate protection from want.

While Maryland provides a pension of $400 a year for her retired teachers this is a low sum to exist on and little inducement to hold capable teachers in the work in this state, when nearby states and cities are offering twice as much.

A 50-50 Proposition

The states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York and the cities of Baltimore and Washington have established retirement systems that will enable their retired teachers to live comfortahly. This they have done by establishing a retirement fund which is contributed to equally hy the state and the teachers, dollar for dollar, thus providing a retirement compensation about double that in Maryland.

And it is such a system that is being proposed for this state for the protection of the school system, and also for the protection of the older teachers after spending their lives in promoting the well-being of the children of this state. The proposed bill is similar in principal to the law recently passed by Congress at the instance of Representative Frederick N. Zihlman for the teachers of the District of Columbia.

Allegany is said to have been the first county to take action on the proposed bill.

Tommy's Swimming Lessons.

There is a little eight-year-old out in the country who is learning to swim. Ordinarily that would not be wonderful, but in the case of Tommy it is, because he had infantile paralysis when he was a baby and he has always been lame. One of the public health nurses came across him and asked his mother to bring Tommy to a clinic that the Bureau of Child Hygiene of the State Department of Health and the local organizations were going to have for the lame children in the neighborhood.

The mother agreed and she and Tommy's father began putting aside some money for hospital treatment and a plaster cast for Tommy if the doctor advised it. When the day of the clinic came, the doctor examined Tommy walking, sitting, flat on his back ,then after some hesitation said, "There isn't a thing we can do for him at the hospital." Tommy listened with a wistful look in his eyes, until the doctor said, "But swimming under a careful teacher; that's the thing that may help those muscles and tendons." And somebody who was at the clinic says Tommy threw his arms around the doctor's neck at the very thought of learning how to swim and be like other boys. The nurse had no difficulty in getting a membership card for Tommy in the "Y" and the swimmnig teacher arranged to give him a private lesson every day. The lessons were started and Tommy is making progress.

At each of the clinics for lame or crippled children—orthopedic clinics they are called—something of this sort has happened. In some instances the doctors have advised an operation to straighten or strengthen the crippled part; in others, braces have been prescribed; in others, special exercis, as in Tommy's case.

A checking up was made recently of the crippled children and young people under twenty-one years old attending schools or having care of hospitals or dispensaries in Baltimore City, and within a short time the list contained 943 names—nearly a thousand. But it is believed that this is by no means complete and that the total number in Baltimore City is about 1400, with about the same number in the counties.

Studies have also been made of the causes producing disability of this sort and it has been found that one-half of the cases were due to infantile paralysis and one-sixth to some form of tuberculosis. Only one out of every fifty of those affected is hopelessly crippled. For all of the rest something can he done to decrease the handicap or relieve the suffering. Because this is the case, arrangements have been made to continue and extend the clinics through which children like Tommy have been reached.

Important legislation in regard to the game laws is soon to be passed in Maryland and Garrett county wishes to have strong representation in the form of a game and fish protective association so that ideas as to what laws are suitable to Garrett county will have some force.

Send all communications to T. E. Buallard, secretary, protem, Oakland.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Waingold, Mrs. Fred Peddicord, Miss Edith Bolden and Mr. Guy Yutzy motored to Pittsburgh on Friday last where Mr. Waingold secured the agency for Garrett county for a standard make of car, a consignment of which will be received by him in a short time.

Mr. F. W. Reis, of Deer Park, is in Baltimore where he is taking some special business training at the Y. M. C. A. schools in that city and was recently chosen as a member of the staff of a monthly publication—Inglings—which is issued in connection with the work in which he is engaged.

County Agent McClone returned to Oakland early in the week from College Park where he had been attending the annual conference of County Agents. A detailed report of the conference has been handed The Republican for publication which will have to go over until a later issue, it being received too late for today's edition.

Influenza has been prevelent in and around Oakland for several weeks past, and a number of the folk who have been afflicted with the disease have been quite ill. Messrs. H. A. Loraditch, Joseph Welling and Robert Gimmel have been more or less seriously ill during the week but it is said that they are slowly improving at this time.

Samuel C. Loechel, who during the holiday season went to visit his son Clarence and family, near Grantsville, was taken ill there and suffered severely for some days with a boaling in one of his ears. His Salisbury friends are glad to note that he has recovered from his recent illness and is again back in his old haunts as lively and jovial as ever.—Meyersdale Republican.

State Senator A. D. Naylor, Miss Mary Drake Naylor and Delegates Arthur Lawton and Albert Markley returned to Oakland Thursday night following the recess of the Legislature until Tuesday night of this week. The party returned to Annapolis on Tuesday morning. While driving toward town from Accident Thursday evening the car in which Senator Naylor and his party were traveling, skidded from the road, owing to its icy condition, and a truck had to be requisitioned from an Accident garage to pull the machine back on the highway before the journey could be resumed.

How They Divided the Fortune

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

HORACE MELTON grabbed the girl quickly and swung her out of the way of the auto truck.

"Ouch," said the girl, "you hurt. You are very rude." She said it rubbing her left arm which Horace had grasped harder than he intended in his excitement at the young lady's peril.

"And you," he retorted, "are very careless. Didn't you see that truck coming?"

"No," she replied, "I was looking the other way. Of course, I am very grateful to you for rescuing me as you did."

"I beg your pardon," said Horace, "but you see, I didn't think. I was so fearful you would be hit."

In spite of her attempted self-control the girl was considerably shaken by her narrow escape. She trembled a little, seeing which Horace said: "You must sit down somewhere and rest. Come into this tea-shop here and have a cupful of tea."

She had been studying the man's face intently—"sizing him up."

Horace was not feeling in the best of humor. Orphaned when a boy, he had been receiving a liberal allowance from a rich uncle and had spent it for the past five years in roaming about the world. And now his uncle was dead and a cablegram had called him home.

During Horace's absence abroad it appeared the deceased millionaire uncle had become guardian of a young lady, the daughter of an old schoolfellow, who had begged him on his dying bed to look after the girl whom reverses of fortune had compelled him to leave penniless. And the will of Horace's uncle read that if Horace should marry Norma Richardson, the orphan aforesaid, then Horace would get the whole fortune. If he refused then the fortune was to be divided between Norma and Horace. Horace had balked at this condition. Marry a girl he had never seen and scarcely heard of? He would rather struggle along on half the fortune he had expected. He mooned around all the morning and in the afternoon had his adventure of the young lady and the auto truck.

She was very pretty, plainly dressed, and had an air about her as if she were quite capable of taking care of herself. Horace realized that as they sat at the table in the tea-room and the rescued girl composed herself with tea and toast and jam.

"It was awfully stupid of me not to have seen that truck coming," she said. "You see, I had been in to see a lawyer on some business and I guess I was thinking more about what the lawyer had been talking to me about than the perils of congested traffic."

She handed a card with a name and address on it to Horace, saying: "May I not know the name of the person who saved my life?"

Horace gazed at the card the girl had handed him for a full minute without replying, then stammered: "I—I am sorry—but I haven't a card with me. My name is Gunther—Maxwell Gunther. May I call tomorrow and inquire if you have entirely recovered from the shock of your little adventure?"

"Why, yes," she replied, looking at him keenly.

Horace escorted the young lady to the subway entrance where he left her and went to the office of his uncle's lawyer. "About my marrying Miss Richardson," said he, "perhaps I will, after all. How long have I got to consider it?"

"Oh, any reasonable time," was the reply. "But Miss Norma was here this afternoon and says she won't marry you."

"Perhaps she'll change her mind," said Horace. "You can't tell. She's a very attractive girl."

"So you have seen her?" exclaimed the lawyer.

"Yes," answered Horace. "I pulled her out of the way of an auto truck and blew her off to tea."

Scarcely had Horace left the office when the telephone rang. It was Norma.

"I met that Mr. Melton today," she said. "He saved my life. He gave me a false name; but I knew him from the picture my guardian had in his library. Perhaps I may accede to the terms of the will after all if he will have me. How long have I got to consider the matter?"

"Any reasonable time," said the lawyer. "Be at my office at ten, tomorrow morning." Then he sent a message to Horace to come to the office at ten the next day, also. The lawyer, in fact, confronted the culprits the one with the other.

"I gave you my real name, just to see what you would do," said Norma—"and you didn't do anything but just stare at the card—and give me a false name. Why?"

"I was afraid you would be prejudiced against me if I gave my real one," said Horace.

"Now you two stop quarreling," said the lawyer, "and come around here two months from today and tell me what you have decided. Get out, both of you."

They were around on time and agreed to accept the provisions of the will [illegible] upon set- [illegible] on certain ac- [illegible] n't play if she [illegible] e accepted.

Saying It With Thrift

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

TWO young men were discussing life in general and marriage in particular, as young men will.

"A man should not marry," said Giles Harrington, "until he is drawing at least seventy-five a week, can show a bank balance of four figures, and is prepared to finance his own home."

"In my opinion," retorted Dick, who was the son of old Doc. Winters, a notably loved but thriftless person, "he should marry when he finds the right girl."

"And I maintain," insisted the other, "that unless conditions that I outlined are met, she will not remain the right girl but prove the truth of that old saying about love flying out of the window when poverty comes in at the door."

Now it is possible that, at the time of this conversation, both young men had already become interested in Martha Endicott.

However, it was not very long after the above discussion of life in general and marriage in particular, that both young men saw fit to call upon Martha.

Martha was seen out driving one day with Giles, the next at the theater with Dick. On Sundays, both Dick and Giles would drop in at the Endicott home.

But they were rivals, and each man knew it. In between calls on Martha, each man was hustling for all he was worth. If it was going to be a case of the better man winning, it was going to be nip and tuck between the two. A tremendous boom of business in town increased Giles' law business and brought more practice to Dick, who was taking over his father's medical work. Giles bought a piece of property so far out of town that wise old ladies winked and said: "He'll be building a house on it for himself and Martha Endicott." Then a nationally known firm put up a factory near by and Giles sold out for double what he had paid. Dick took a run-down two-family house in payment for a bad debt and before the year was up it was wanted badly by the owners of the apartment house on either side, so Dick turned a penny he had not expected to turn.

Dick was inclined to be free with his money, yet no one ever accused Giles of niggardliness. One merely spoke of him as "a thrifty man" with a suspicion of admiration in the saying of it. While of Dick one said, smiling and shaking one's head a bit deprecatorily, "easy come, easy go. Dick's a good spender."

He would have lavished gifts upon Martha had she allowed him to. But she was singularly fastidious in her treatment of both men, and what she did not permit Giles she did not permit Dick. Fortunately, perhaps, their invitations seldom clashed so that she was not forced to decide between them. Dick did not invite her to the few intellectual affairs that came to town, as did Giles. He was more apt to run in unexpectedly as he was on the rounds of his morning calls with something impromptu.

As, for instance, "I'm taking the kids in the ward out to the circus this afternoon. Want to come along and feed the animals?"

And Martha would go, as lively as any of the youngsters, coming back to slip into a low-necked gown and evening cape to hear the Patio players in Shakespearean repertoire with Giles, the highbrow.

As chance would have it, both chose to propose the evening of the annual bazaar given by the entire town for the hospital, on the lovely grounds of the hospital itself. It was always a busy day for Martha, and when evening had come and the strain was a bit over, she was glad to slip into one of the stone seats backed against a mass of shrubbery and listen to the sweet strains from the violin.

Giles came first, and plunged into his declaration without preamble. "I've loved you for years, Martha, but would not speak until I had what seemed to be adequate possessions to offer you. Some people accuse me of being over thrifty, but what I have done I have done for you."

It was hard for Martha to do what she did, but it had to be done. She laid a pitying hand on his knee, for she knew what her words would mean to Giles. "Some time ago, Giles," she began tenderly, "Dick Winters told me frankly that he loved me, but was not in a position to marry me. He refused to bind me, although I think I was quite willing to be bound. I must be free, he said, to marry anyone else. If I wished, only he wanted me to know that he was working and saving for me. Perhaps he won't ask me again, but, if he does, I am ready."

"In other words," said Giles bitterly, "he set you aside like a savings account, to be there when he wanted it."

"Perhaps," said Martha. "There are many kinds of thrift, Giles."

Giles had left her and she was wondering if, after all, Dick had not perhaps changed his feeling since that far away night when he had told her of his love, when she felt herself drawn into a pair of strong and eager arms.

"Oh, Dick!" she murmured and met his lips with outstretched lips.

The Fortunate Accident

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

MARTHA was preoccupied as she drove home from the office that Saturday afternoon. For Martha, who had been driving her little car only six months, it was quite necessary to concentrate all attention on the road ahead and the gears before her. But Martha was thinking of Samuel Stevens. Samuel Stevens was the youngest of the young lawyers who frequented the old law offices at which Martha was employed as stenographer. Samuel had a rambling sort of gait and no knack at dressing. Not a very favorable presence for a lawyer, but with the rare ability that indicates success.

That morning Samuel had somewhat falteringly asked Martha to go to an important football game that afternoon, and with her dainty head held rather high Martha had declined the invitation. Samuel, looking decidedly hurt and embarrassed, had mumbled out something to the effect that he asked her only because he happened to have the tickets and it seemed a shame to waste them.

Martha felt a species of annoyance at this rather ungallant speech. Also she felt annoyance with herself for having declined the invitation so heartlessly. Driving home, as she saw the cars bearing toward her carrying overcoated men and fur-clad women obviously going to the great game, she felt a quick eagerness to be one of them. She saw again the confused, hurt expression on Samuel's plain face. But she did not see approaching behind her on the car track to the left the "fast line trolley." Her mirror reflected the trolley well enough, but Molly was too preoccupied with thoughts of Samuel to look at that important little reflector. Then suddenly she did see ahead of her a break in the pavement. A sharp turn to the left occurred to her as the best way out of her difficulty and as she turned she chanced to look at the mirror, and there bearing heavily and rapidly upon her at the back was the dark form of the fast-line trolley.

Martha put on her brake quickly, felt a sickening jolt, heard breaking glass and grating metal and then shut her eyes and waited. When she opened them in a second the peril seemed to have passed but she trembled on the verge of fainting and dared not slip from her seat.

"I couldn't stop on a ten-cent piece," the motorman told her. "What the blazes did you think I was going to do?"

"I didn't expect you to do anything," Martha said with tears in her eyes. "But I'm very much obliged to you for doing what you did." Meanwhile strong-armed men were shoving and lifting her little car away from the front of the trolley. "Window's broken and she's kind of stove in," remarked one man with a grin, "but I guess she'll go. Fool's luck—ain't it?" And the conductor none too courteously was asking Martha to produce her license.

Then Martha felt a strong, steady hand upon her arm. "Excuse me," said a clear voice beside her, "but I happen to be this lady's lawyer." Martha looked and saw the calm, strong face of Samuel Stevens. He seated her again at the wheel, took the number of the trolley car and in parting shook hands with the motorman. He had been going home on the trolley when the accident occurred—not caring to go to the game without her.

Passengers piled back into the trolley which was soon rolling rapidly on. Then Martha pressed forward her own light car and breathed a sigh of deep relief to know that Samuel was at her side.

"I saw it all," said he, "and have the names of witnesses. The trolley wasn't even scratched but there's about a hundred dollars' worth of damage all told to your car. Fault of the county. They'll settle. I'll attend to that. Of course you ought not to have turned to the left that way."

"I know it," said Martha, "but I wasn't thinking—that is, I wasn't thinking of the road or anything. I was just thinking of you." Then suddenly Martha felt very weak and exhausted. She drew her car to the right out of traffic and stopped. "I can't drive any more just now," she said, and then she felt the enormous satisfaction of resting her head against Samuel's shoulder and shedding tears on his rough coat—while without the slightest hesitation or embarrassment Samuel's strong arm encircled her. "Don't cry, Martha dear," he was saying. "You've been so good to me," said Martha, "and I was so horrid."

"I've only done what any man would have done for—for any woman," said Samuel. "But I wish I could have done a lot more. Because I love you. I ought not to tell you, perhaps, but God knows how hard it is not to."

Martha, forgetting that it was still broad daylight and that they were on a busy highway, bent over toward Samuel, turned his face to her with her hands and kissed him. "Samuel, dearest, I love you, love you, love you."

Samuel told Martha she was an angel and that he was the happiest man in the world and no doubt he was. Then taking the wheel seat he said he would hurry her home.

"But I don't want to go home," said Martha. "I want to go to the game. And now that we're engaged, we really ought to celebrate."

FROM PLANTATION TO TABLE

WHEN it's dinner time in these United States, it's generally lunch time in Honolulu. You go into your kitchen, and perhaps pour out the golden contents of a can of Hawaiian pineapple to give warmth and color to your winter dinner-table. Over in Hawaii, it's noon time out in the pineapple fields and hundreds of brown-skinned workers sit down in the sunshine to enjoy their lunch of fish and fruit. There is a warm languor in the tropical air, and now and then the slow strains of native song are heard. In every direction as far as the eye can see, big golden pineapples are lying in the fields, ripened under the liquid sunshine of Hawaii.

Just what happens to this Monarch of Fruits, from the moment it reigns on its throne of green spiked leaves, proudly wearing its crown, until it appears on your dinner table, still colored, however, with the magic touch of tropical sun, will be of interest in that it explains why our canned pineapple tastes as luscious as the fresh ripened fruits which the natives break on a rock and eat fresh from the fields.

From the moment it reaches the cannery to the time it comes out in the labeled can, the pineapple is handled in royal manner. It is not touched by human hands during the whole process of canning.

There is especially prepared for it a big sunny white laboratory, where everything is spotless, from the snowy white caps and aprons of the swarthy women workers to the gleaming white walls and tables of the cannery.

As the cylinder travels down the "line" via the endless belt route it passes before long rows of women workers wearing rubber gloves who remove any remaining "eyes" that the big machine has overlooked. The dark-skinned faces, as they review the pineapple parade make an interesting study. Perhaps it is the eternal sunshine of the Hawaiian Islands that has seeped into them, or perhaps it is the thought of the big lunch that they will have at noon—but at any rate the faces are happy ones, and their quick dark glances seem to denote eager interest in their work.

Now the pineapple is ready for the slicer. A machine receives the cylindrical fruit from another belt and slices it in symmetrical slices which do not vary a fraction of an inch. Another machine is busy at the same time digging out the luscious part of the fruit which remained inside the shell. This is the most delicious part of the pineapple as it has been nearest the sun. Later it will be labeled "crushed pineapple."

Pineapple is syruped in a very sanitary manner, but at a whirlwind speed. Eighty cans a minute revolve around the syruping machine, to receive their quota of rich heavy syrup, made from refined pineapple juice and pure cane sugar. This syrup is a big factor in making Hawaiian pineapple so delicious.

The cans of pineapple are then ready to go into the cooker. After that they go into the lacquer machine, which prevents rust, the dryer, and the cooler, which prevents further cooking.

This entire process has taken not more than 35 minutes. Every element of nutriment and every atom of delicious taste has been captured and preserved within that filled can of pineapple. Food inspectors who buy a sample can and have it chemically tested will find that it contains as much vitamin A as the ripe fruit, and that it is a rich source also of Vitamins B and C

Within thirty-six hours after the Pineapple Monarch reigned in the field, if you go down to the beach, where little Hawaiian boys dive around incoming boats for elusive pennies, and where the breakers foam on the coral reef, you can see great ship loads of these same pineapples packed in thousands of cases, ready to leave the land of plumy palms, oleanders, and gay hibiscus, to bring royal riches to tables of many lands.

Railway Boosters' Meeting.

Persons interested in the increased usefulness and benefits of the Casselman Valley Railroad to the community it serves, met in the W. O. W. Hall in Grantsville last Thursday evening. Since the road re-opened last fall, much work has been done on it and more is projected. Considerable freight has been moved over the line since the resumption of operations, and it is hoped that shipments of less than car lots may soon be a reality for the convenience of the community.

The principal speaker at the public meeting held Thursday evening was former State's Attorney William R. Offutt, of Oakland. He was followed by D. D. Alderman, of New York City, and Mr. C. H. Bill, of Grantsville, who outlined the great advantages accruing to a community with a good railroad service.

S. H. Bracey, of Philadelphia, Pa., who is president of the railroad, also spoke concerning the future of the road.

...T. LAKE PARK.

A large number of men got busy last week and filled the ice house at the lake with fine clear eleven-inch ice. The harvest this year was accomplished under difficulties, the two last days of work being done with the rain falling almost continuously, but those engaged stuck by their posts until the house was filled to capacity.

The almost continuous rain from last Tuesday until Saturday melted the snow and ice so that the earth is now bare, which has produced a slight rise in the watercourses and has rendered the dirt roads in this community almost impassable.

The Adult Bible Class of the M. E. church elected officers for the ensuing year as follows: President, C. S. May; vice-president, J. A. Enlow; secretary, Miss Rella Pope; treasurer, H. M. Weeks; teacher, H. V. Leighton. The stay-at-home people of the community are earnestly invited to join and take part in the deliberations of this splendid body of men.

More of the History of the Park.

Early in the history of the Park, Miss E. B. Swan, finding that she escaped the scourge of hay fever here, purchased a lot and built a substantial cottage upon it and in which she established a private school. Afterwards she erected a large three-story building which she named "Briarbend Seminary." This school she continued as long as she was physically able. About this time Miss Jennie S...ith erected Grace Cottage (now Th...burn Inn) where she made her home and made it headquarters for her religious and temperance work, also as a boarding house and which she operated for a long time.

A. W. Dennett, at the time known all over the continent as the owner of a string of eating houses stretching from the Atlantic coast on through to the middle west, built the Dennett Hotel, where many people in succeeding years found a real home-like comfortable and convenient stopping place. Many ministers and missionaries were entertained here free during the camp meetings. Eventually the property passed out of Mr. Dennett's hands and was torn down in recent years.

Miss Sarah C. Harris had built the cottage now owned and occupied as a summer home by Dr. T. D. Richards. Finding that it was too small to entertain the many guests applying to her, she bought other lots and built Faith Home (now Hamilton Hall), where she entertained many people from year to year.

The Alleghany House and Columbian Hotel were also built early in the history of the Park. The latter house has been demolished. The Allegany House is still in existence and is being operated year after year by Mrs. Skiles where many come summer after summer and find a hearty welcome from this delightful hostess.

New cottages and other buildings were erected each year and wells dug or drilled until L. T. Yoder, of Pittsburgh erected a reservoir on a high point in the Park, laid water mains and a system of sewers and put in a pumping station at Crystal Spring, located near the head of the lake, from which water was pumped to supply the place for all purposes. After a while it was found that the supply was insufficient to meet the demand, and a spring on the side of the mountain located several miles east of the Park was secured by Mr. Yoder, pipes were laid and the water supply from this source was brought into the Park and has been in use ever since.

The Association built all the streets and kept them in repair. They were lighted at first by gasoline or oil lamps, which later gave way to a system of electric lights, the lighting plant having been established by private parties. This plant was later purchased and operated by the Association but was succeeded in recent years by a system introduced by the West Penn Company. The new system affords fine lights all the year 'round and at a decreased cost not only to the municipality but for home lighting as well.

As the number of residents increased a mutual arrangement was planned by which all interested parties would help both maintain and develop the Park.

Following a charter granted by the Maryland Legislature in the winter of 1888, the Community of Mountain Lake Park was formed in the summer of that year. The charter granted authorized the taxing of all properties, both of the Association and the cottages and real estate owned by individuals. This law is still effective and the revenue derived therefrom is appropriated for the purpose of maintaining the streets, lighting the same and building and keeping in repair other municipal property.

During these early years the officers and directors were changed from time to time, but the late John M. Davis was retained for about ten years as superintendent, not only as manager and director of the local work, but as a traveling representative to advertise and secure conventions and other gatherings to hold their meetings in the Park during the summer months. His foreman, the writer, through all the early years, remained, helping Mr. Davis build up and maintain the splendid work begun, and upon whom much of the responsibility rested for three years, as Mr. Davis' business and private affairs, coupled with the fact that his health was failing, interfered with his activities in pushing the Park's claims as he would liked to have done.

A new superintendent was sought, and Rev. W. B. Osborne, a returned missionary was employed, but soon after entering upon his duties he was so badly injured by a train that as a result he died.

On August 1, 1891, Rev. L. A. Rudisill was elected Superintendent which position he held several years. About this time Dr. W. L. Davidson instituted what was then known as the Mountain Chautauqua and which added immensely to the popularity of the Park. The attractions billed under the management of Dr. Davidson brought thousands to hear the gifted orators of that day, such men as the late Sam Jones, Dr. T. DeWitt Miller, Dr. Talmage, and many other men of National repute, including William J. Bryan, filling the immense auditorium to capacity.

The Mountain Lake Messenger, a publication in the interest of the Sunday School Assembly, was discontinued and the Mountain Chautauqua, published quarterly, succeeded it.

It was found that with the growing popularity of the Park, the original auditorium and Assembly Hall was inadequate to accommodate the large number of people coming to the Park which resulted in the erection of the Hall of Philosophy and later the immense amphitheatre, both built at the behest of Dr. Davidson. The amphitheatre was dedicated on August 1, 1900. These early meetings have left their impress upon the minds of hundreds of men and women who are now in middle or advanced ages.

Immediately following the establishment of the Park a Sunday school was organized, which was kept open only during the fall and winter and early spring months until the year 1900, when the Methodist Episcopal church here was built and dedicated, and in which sessions of the school are now held throughout the year. At the time the church was dedicated and following its dedication for some time the Oakland Methodist minister would preach for the Park congregation every two weeks. Now there is a regular pastor located within the Park who holds services regularly every Sunday.

Until 1892 sessoins of the public school were conducted in rooms secured for the purpose when the first school building was erected, containing one room. Later another room was added to the original building, which is located at the corner of Oakland avenue and L street. J. A. E.

PRESIDENT'S HOME, FIRST PUBLIC BUILDING IN THE NATION'S CAPITOL

The White House, Seat of Executive Functions of Government, One of Most Beautiful Buildings in Washington

The President's Principal Contacts With the Nation Are Newspapers, Telephone Lines and Radio

THE White House, the first public building erected in Washington the Federal City, is the most famous residence in the country. This mansion located on Pennsylvania Avenue is a shrine to every patriotic American and thousands and thousands of people visit it annually.

Being the seat of the executive functions of the American Government, the White House is fittingly one of the most beautiful buildings in the Capital.

While its simplicity is in keeping with the democratic ideals of the United States, one would never call the interiors of the White House "palatial;" the halls and rooms are large and impressive, but simply designed and decorated. The offices in the western annex are much plainer in their furnishings than the executive headquarters of many large corporntions.

At the main entrance to the White House members of a special police force are stationed, and in the entrance hall are ushers to meet expected guests or friends of the President's family. To one's right, as the house is entered, the head usher has an office. Upon him rests the responsibility of seeing that visitors are properly received, and that the interior appearance of the White House is orderly.

Persons who are invited to visit the President or a member of his family may be shown to the second floor, where are the private living rooms, study and library. One room on the first floor which is frequently used by Mrs. Coolidge is the Red Room, reached by passing through the main entrance hall. The color scheme of this room is red, save for a marble mantel. It is rich in paintings, there being full-length portraits of George and Martha Washington, and some of those who have been occupants of the White House in the past.

Passing from the Red Room to the east, one enters the Blue Room and then the Green Room, both of which are used for the reception of guests on formal occasions. Especially when diplomats are received are these rooms in use.

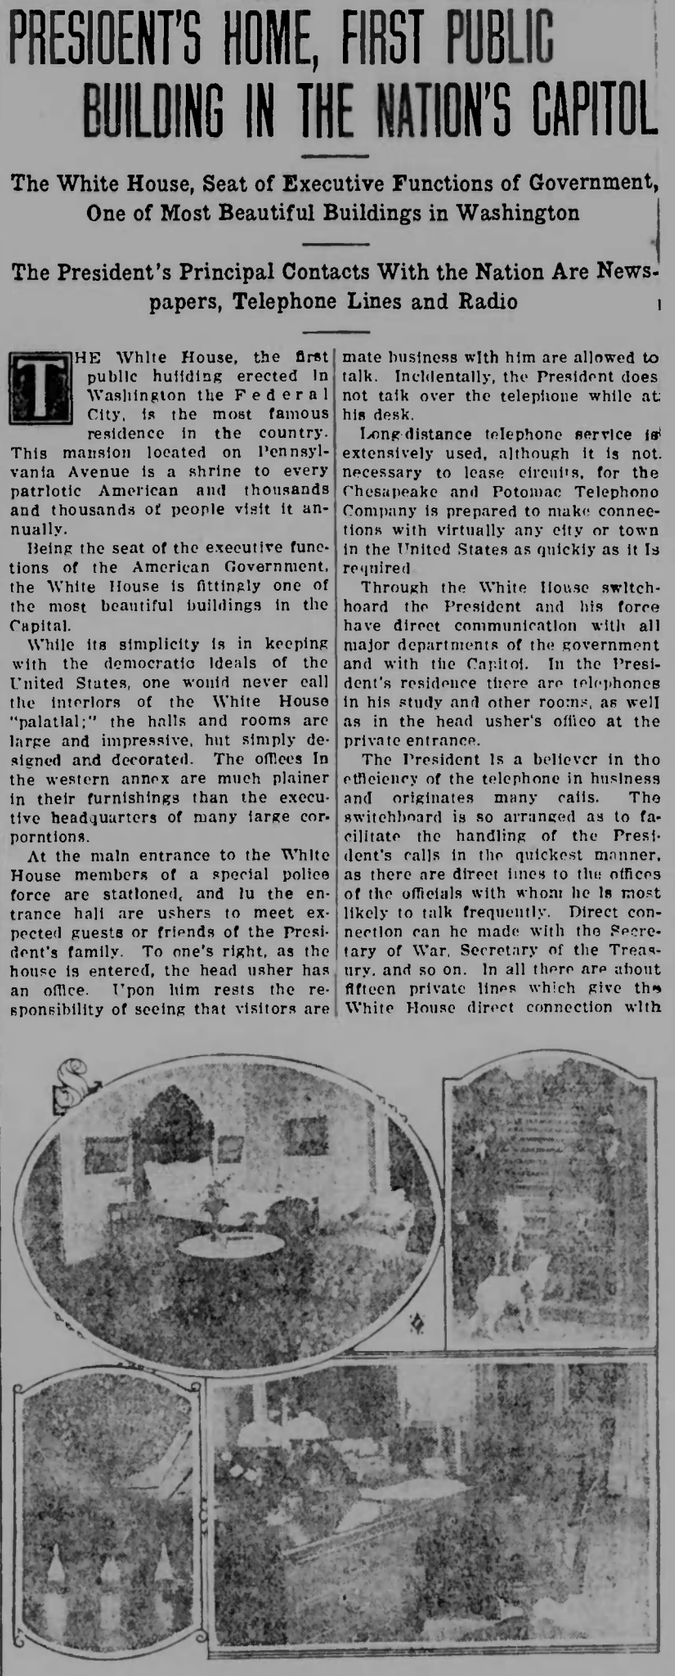
Also, on the second floor are the private living quarters of the White House family, the President's library and study, and rooms for guests.

In former years the White House offices also were located on the second floor, but in those days the amount of business to be transacted was much less than it is now, and the clerical force was much smaller. When the office was moved into the annex, the space vacated in the residence was converted into living quarters.

The President's office is on the south side of the building, with his secretary's office adjoining it on the west. To the east is a small room where the President can confer privately, and beyond this in the southeast corner is the room where the President and his Cabinet confer.

One room in the office building is devoted to wire communication facilities. The telephone private branch exchange switchboard is located here and is under the supervision of the Executive Clerk and his force. Telephone calls for the President are answered by one of the men of this force, all of whom has had long experience at the White House, and only those callers who are known to have legiti...mate business with him are allowed to talk. Incidentally, the President does not talk over the telephone while at his desk.

Long-distance telephone service is extensively used, although it is not necessary to lease circuits, for the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company is prepared to make connections with virtually any city or town in the United States as quickly as it is required.



Through the White House switchboard the President and his force have direct communication with all major departments of the government and with the Capitol. In the President's residence there are telephones in his study and other rooms, as well as in the head usher's office at the private entrance.

The President is a believer in the efficiency of the telephone in business and originates many calls. The switchboard is so arranged as to facilitate the handling of the President's calls in the quickest manner, as there are direct lines to the offices of the officials with whom he is most likely to talk frequently. Direct connection can be made with the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Treasury, and so on. In all there are about fifteen private lines which give the White House direct connection with the homes or private offices of high government officials.

Other direct lines connect with the private branch exchange switchboards of the other government departments, making quick conversation possible in case the White House officials should want to talk with any of the bureau chiefs or minor officials in those departments.

Direct lines go to the Capitol, connecting with a booth convenient to the Senate chamber. Should the President or his Secretary desire to talk with anyone on the floor of the Senate, the operator at the White House would ring this booth and ask the clerk who answered to summon the person called. Direct connection can be made with the regular Capitol switchboard in case the White House wishes to talk to any member of Congress in his office.

The President's two principal contacts with the nation at large are through radio and the newspapers. President Coolidge has been heard by more people than any other President probably by more than all others put together. Nearly all his important speeches now are broadcast, and telephone lines are instrumental in enabling people in all sections of the country to hear them.

LONG DISTANCE GUN SALUTE

When Rear Admiral Thomas Washington settled down to his duties a short time ago as commandant of the Twelfth Naval District, with headquarters at San Francisco, he was given a "long distance" gun salute by telephone. Admiral Washington relieved Rear Admiral John H. Dayton, commandant of the Mare Island Navy Yard, who had been filling both posts. When the orders of the two officers were read in the presence of ranking officers of the district the gun salute was sounded over a direct telephone line between San Francisco and the receiving ship at G... a pleasing tribute to a ... officer as he assumed a new command. The reduction of wages for labor is in about the same proportion, while the companies have gone back to their respective yardage rates.

The companies making the reduction are Wolf Den Coal Company, Shallmar, Md.; Gleason Coal and Coke Co., Gleason, W. Va.; Boyd Coal Company, Potomac Manor, W. Va.; Hamill Coal and Coke Co., Blaine, W. Va.; Brady-Warner Coal Company, Oakmont, and Manor Coal Co., Vindex, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN

VOLUME 51. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, FEBRUARY 3, 1927. NUMBER 50.

TWENTY DOOR KEEPERS STANDING AT ATTENTION

And Blacksmith Stenographers Using Their Hooks as Delegate Joseph Passes In Review.

(From The Marylander.)

The General Assembly started off is week with its Twenty Door Keeps standing at attention and the Sacksmith Stenographers using their ooks, as Delegate Joseph passed in review. They deny that they ever were, above anything else, Blacksmiths, but, however, keep their eyes on Joseph.

—o—

The members of the House wonder at the great quantities of mail being sent them, in fact, more mail has reached them the short time they have been in session, than during the hole of any previous year. They lly should have, not extra supper y, but secretaries to answer their communications received. er they realize it or not, they ome importance while the As- s in session.

—o—

re a few of them, however, pronounce dramatically the often used in politics. In the Legislature, they say and of the politicians as bourn, of Harford coun- rrupted the speaker to ask ne have the reading clerk, Clarence Wolf, pronounce at least three words in English when reading the title of the bills being introduced, whereupon Clarence put on force, such as he is capable of doing when telling one of his famous stories, for men only, and then put it over in fine style.

—o—

The Baltimore City Delegates are beginning to show up, there being no evidence of silent glue in their seats as yet.

During the week they popped out f their boxes, rather unexpectedly, in act, so fast that the Speaker realized a most unusual situation existed, and as he looked over the floor of the House, I wondered if he was looking for the man in the brown derby, who has quit the Town Hall and the House of Justice for the Legislative Halls.

—o—

Oystermen in great numbers raided the House Chamber during a hearing on the proposed administration bills. They were angry, unquestionably so. Most of them said that had the Governor made such a proposition to them during his campaign on the shore, there would have been a different tale to tell.

Many of them believe, however, that the Governor is weakening on the move to lease the oyster beds, since he has seen before him the much evident opposition.

I have never seen more sincere men at Annapolis, than these men who derive their living from the oyster bars. It is the principal question up to this time, before the Legislative body. They openly refer to the leasing proposition as a colossal steal, adding, that the "foreigners" have hogged up all of the State's natural resources, mentioning the water power, and now are about to rob Maryland of its Oyster Beds. I doubt very much that the Bill will pass in its present condition, if it passes at all.

—o—

A disappointed member, who has been surprised at the wire pulling, lobbying, and pressure brought to bear upon him, has spoken to me of writing for The Marylander, what he called a "True Confession" telling everything of interest that goes on, giving all the facts. As I am willing to publish sueh an account, it is now up to the new member to write such an account. I am hoping that he will not back out, as I have said from time to time, real baek bone is not overplentiful at the State House.

—o—

Robert E. Ford, who represents the fourth legislative district in the House, does not appear to be a man who is easily bossed. From his actions in past performances, he is going to make a good member. And I might say to this courageous young man that usually in politics it is the balky horse that is petted. Among those from the City who have enough courage to take the floor are Delegates Gray, Callan, Michel, Berman, Fine, Ford, and Joseph, the latter of whom is more on the floor than in his seat, so I am glad to see that the City is not going to be classed as a yes and no political battalion, or mummy delegation.

One member who hails from Limer- ick, better known to some as the tenth ward of Baltimore, whose dignified appearance attracts the attention of all, is Thomas E. Sweeney. No more respectable looking man ever walked the tiles of the House Chamber than Mr. Sweeney. It is worth a trip to the State Capitol to look at him as he is in many particulars a direct contrast to other members in his manner and ways. He has had little to say upon the floor, but he is the kind of man to whom the late Pierpont Morgan would have loaned money on his looks, even though it does not appear that he is in need of it, for he is the one member of leisure of whom I have spoken before. The tenth ward need not be ashamed of its senior member. He looks the part.

B. & O. TO OBSERVE ITS CENTENNIAL FEBRUARY 28

Dinner Will Commemorate The 100th Anniversary of Charter Granted The Road.

The first official function in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the charter by which the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company came into existence will be a banquet February 28 at the Lyric Theatre, Baltimore.

Invitations for the occasion will be sent to approximately 800 persons, F. X. Milholland, assistant to George M. Shriver, senior vice-president of the railroad, said Monday morning. The hosts will be Daniel Willard, president, and the directors of the company.

Among those to be invited, according to Mr. Milholland, are Governor Ritchie, members of the Legislature, Mayor Jackson, members of the City Council, other city and state officials, presidents and officers of other railroads, professional and business men of Baltimore and other cities and a number of officials and employes of the Baltimore and Ohio.

Mr. Willard to Preside.

Mr. Willard will preside. The scheduled speakers are Governor Ritchie, Mayor Jackson and Newton D. Baker, a director of the railroad and Secretary of War under President Wilson. A program of entertainment is being arranged.

The principal exhibitions, pageants and other forms of celebration to commemorate the anniversary, Mr. Milholland said, will be held in the latter part of the summer and the early fall, probably extending over several week.

Governor Ritchie was authorized by the General Assembly in 1924 to appoint a commission to represent the State in cooperating with the railroad in the general celebration. This commission consists of Holmes D. Baker, of Frederick; Oliver H. Bruce, Jr., of Cumberland; Van Lear Black, Alexander Brown, Jacob Epstein, John W. Garrett, George Weems Williams, of Baltimore.

The charter to the Baltimore and Ohio was granted by the State Legislature February 28, 1827. It was the first legislative grant in the United States by which a railroad was authorized to carry on a general freight and passenger business.

The company is now operating under the same charter.

At the time the charter was granted there were a few tramways and short lines in existence or contemplated in America. All later were absorbed by companies of subsequent origin, however, and it is for this reason that the Baltimore and Ohio is said to have started the first of the present railroad systems.

Oakland 4-H Club Organized.

Thursday afternoon of last week a group of Oakland girls met at the Court House for the purpose of organizing a 4-H club under the supervision of Miss Lola Belle Green, of the Extension Service. Miss Green kindly explained to the girls the meaning of the four "H's"—Heart, Hand, Head and Health. The following officers of the club were chosen:

President, Geraldine Nordeck; vice-president, Mildred Stemple; treasurer, Mary Frances Yutzy; secretary, Rosella Hinebaugh. Committees were appointed as follows: Program, Virginia Gilbert, Agnes Helbig, Bernadine Canty; publicity committee, Bernadette Maffett, Sara Catharine Stanton.

The next meeting will be held on February 10th to which all Oakland girls are cordially invited.

FINZEL SCENE OF EARLY MORNING CONFLAGRATION

Francis McKenzie, Merchant and Postmaster, Barely Escaped From Burning Building.

At Finzel, Garrett county, early on last Thursday morning the store building owned by Francis McKenzie, in which was also located the village postoffice, was entirely consumed by fire, entailing considerable loss to the owner.

McKenzie, who had sleeping apartments on the second floor, barely had time to escape. It is thought that the fire was burning for at least an hour before he was aroused from his sleep about three o'clock. Besides being postmaster he operated a general store, having recently purchased the business from Irvin Steinla, who removed from Finzel to LaVale, near Cumberland.

The burned building was comparatively new and was valued at $6,000, while the stock of goods contained within the building was valued at $7,000. Mr. McKenzie carried $2,000 insurance on the stock. All the postoffice supplies were also destroyed, including $200 in stamps. The postoffice loss is placed at $500.

The origin of the fire is unknown. The building was heated with stoves. Residents of the little town could do slight work toward staying the fire. After forming a bucket-brigade with four members of the Frostburg Fire Department, who responded with the motor truck, they were handicapped by the lack of water.

COOPERATION OF TOWNSPEOPLE ASKED BY MAYOR

Municipal Head and Fire Chief Request Observance of a Few Simple Rules.

Mayor Lawrence M. Fraley and Fire Chief George Kerins have requested the publication of the following addressed to "The Citizens of Oakland," which The Republican takes pleasure in giving space in its columns today:

From time to time the necessity of a fire department and the urgent need of the local volunteer company has been called to your attention. You have been called upon for contributions and to support various things for the benefit of the fire department.

The company is grateful for the splendid support it has received and deeply appreciates the hearty cooperation that has made the present equipment possible. They realize, however, as does every thinking citizen, that more than financial cooperation is necessary if the emergency of a fire is to be dealt with in the most effective manner.

You are especially urged to give particular attention to the following requests:

Do not congregate at or about the fire house when the siren is sounded.

Do not under any circumstances get on the fire trucks when the same are enroute to a fire unless you are a member of the volunteer department and under instructions from the chief or assistant chief.

Do not park your car in a block where a fire is located.

Please obey strictly the following order of the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, and please note that a violation of this order carries a penalty of the revocation of your driver's license:

"It is unlawful for any person in the operation of a motor vehicle to obstruct any fire engine, hose truck, hook-and-ladder truck or other fire apparatus proceeding to a fire, and all motor vehicles shall immediately, upon being warned of the approach of such fire apparatus, give the same the right of way. Violations of this order will subject offenders to suspension or revocation of their driving licenses.

By order of—
E. AUSTIN BAUGHMAN,
"Commissioner of Motor Vehicles."

The officers of the town and the fire company will appreciate your hearty cooperation.

L. M. FRALEY, Mayor.
GEO. T. KERINS,
Chief of Volunteer Fire Department

Held For Non-Support.

At a hearing before Justice of the Peace W. A. Gonder on Saturday, Asa Riggs, of Mt. Lake Park, an employe at the H. Weber & Sons Co., was held in $500 bond for his appearance before the Grand Jury on a charge of non-support of his wife, Mrs. Lillie Calhoun Riggs, and their young son. In default of bail Riggs was committed to the County Jail to await the action of the Jury.

DEMAND FOR CONOWINGO PROBE CAUSES HOUSE STIR

Resolution Calls for Appointment of Commission To Investigate Handling of Project

STATE HOUSE, Annapolis, Md., Feb. 2.—A Republican move to have the state's handling of the Conowingo dam project officially investigated with a revival of Republican allegations, made during Governor Ritchie's last campaign, caused a flare of excitement in the House of Delegates today.

A resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of five House members—three Democrats and two Republicans—to investigate the enterprise, was introduced by Delegate Paul Berman, of the Fourth Baltimore City District. Appointment of counsel to prosecute the investigation and report its findings to the House, also is provided for. Parliamentary procedure prevented the reading of the resolution in full before the delegates, and it was referred to the Rules Committee.

Reading Blocked

When the heading of the resolution had been read, in accordance with routine procedure, Mr. Berman rose with a request that the full text also be read. Speaker E. Brooke Lee ruled that this request was out of order, inasmuch as such reading would require unanimous consent of the House. Objections to the reading immediately were made from the floor by several Democrats.

Commenting on his resolution, Mr. Berman said:

"To my mind, it is of the utmost importance that this resolution be adopted, not only for the purpose of proving or disproving the statements made reflecting on the good faith of public officials, but also of removing any suspicion or reflection from Governor Ritchie."

May Affect Presidential Chances.

"As we all know, Governor Ritchie is one of the foremost candidates for the Democratic nomination for president in 1928. With the charges made against him in the last campaign, it will, to my mind, be utterly impossible for him to receive the nomination in the Democratic convention unless these charges are disproved.

"Under these circumstances, I think the responsibility of Governor Ritchie's nomination for the presidency of the United States rests in the hands of the House of Delegates, as it is the only body under the Constitution of our state which can make a full and complete investigation into the whole affair."

Nothing To Fear.

Governor Ritchie said:

"The Republican candidate for governor tried to make an issue at the election last fall of my approval of the Conowingo dam proposition, and the people of Maryland showed what they thought about it by electing me a third term with a 60,000 majority. I must be getting along pretty nicely if this is all they can rake up against me."

Besides the Conowingo resolution, Mr. Berman introduced a bill which would repeal a law now on the statute books, prohibiting the bringing into Baltimore City, of electricity generated by the Susquehanna Power Company.

Mr. Berman's resolution stated that many definite statements were made during the recent gubernatorial campaign, which reflected on the good faith of public officials in connection with the dam project; that the governor and some of his appointees have been mentioned in connection therewith; and that "it is the duty of Democrats and Republicans alike to have all suspicion of said transaction removed from those charged, to the end that they will never again be repeated, if found to be untrue and on the other hand, if found to be true, after an impartial investigation, such punishment shall be meted out to those found guilty as might seem right and proper."

Would Delve Into Contracts.

Inquiry would be made into all contracts between the Susquehanna Power Company; Philadelphia Electric Company and affiliated corporations, and any other corporation involved in the construction of the dam. The amount of money spent by any corporation prior to the building of the dam or the letting of contracts therefor, and all promotion charges, expenses and fees in connection therewith would be investigated.

Investigation also would be made of conferences held at the Maryland Club, Baltimore, between Francis T. Homer and J. E. Aldred, and others at a Baltimore hotel; conferences held at the office of Frank A. Furst and the Arundel Corporation, relating to dam contracts and conferences held at the same place when any Public Service Commission members were present during the discussion of contracts or the building of the dam.

Contracts of the Arundel Corporation and Stone Webster, Inc., for building the dam and for the relocation of railroad tracks and buildings would be inquired into, with the contracts of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company and the General Electric Company.

The failure of Governor Ritchie and the Public Service Commission to accept the advice of People's Counsel Clarence W. Miles, to delay action until the present Legislature had considered the project; conferences between the Public Service Commissions of Maryland and Pennsylvania, relating to the dam and the supplying of current to Pennsylvania, would come in for scrutiny, as would the failure of the Maryland Public Service Commission to insist upon or protect the right to have electricity generated at Conowingo brought into Maryland.

The resolution would grant the proposed committee all the necessary powers to carry on its inquiry, and provides that should it be unable to make a report of its findings at this assembly, it would do so during the 1928 assembly.

Under the resolution, Isaac Loeb Strauss, William Milnes Maloy, Enos S. Strockbridge and the state attorney general would constitute the counsel delegated to conduct the investigation.

DEPARTMENT RESPONDS TO INITIAL FIRE ALARM

Since Reception of New Equipment—Blaze In Livery Barn Soon Extinguished.

The Oakland Volunteer Fire Department answered its first call to a fire since the arrival of its high-powered Locomobile fire truck, on Monday afternoon when the members of the organization upon responding to the siren extinguished a blaze in the barn utilized for many years by the late Thomas Martin as a livery stable, located on an alley between Oak street and the Baltimore and Ohio Railway tracks.

Not more than two or three minutes were consumed after the firemen had reached the building until the blaze, which had burned its way from the ground floor up the side of a heavy supporting post to the second floor of the structure was extinguished.

In recent months the barn has been utilized as a storage place and work shop by the Cumberland & Allegheny Gas Company, and at the time of the blaze there was approximately a thousand dollars worth of stoves and gas fittings stored in the building. However, no damage resulted to the property in the barn and only slight damage was done the building, which was covered by insurance and is now being repaired by the insurance company carrying the policy.

The origin of the fire cannot be definitely stated, but it is supposed by R. R. Gilbert, local superintendent of the gas company, that a workman's apron, which had been hanging on the burned post had been brushed down and fell upon a gas stove which was several feet away and which ignited from the heat thrown out by the stove, which was kept burning in order to make the place comfortable for the employes while engaged at work. The fire from the apron communicated itself to apair of overalls hanging upon the post, and thus found its way to the second floor in a short time.

Second Call Answered This Morning.

The second call for the local firefighters to respond to extinguish a fire came this morning at 8:10 o'clock, when the trucks hurried to the residence of Mrs. William L. Casteel and with little time consumed a slight blaze was extinguished on the roof of the house which had been caused by a spark from a flue. With the exception of removing a few shingles from the house no damage was done.

STRANGER IN COMMUNITY TOOK YOUTHFUL BRIDE OFF

Pittsburgh Man Held in Oakland Jail Charged With Having Stolen Young Bride of Nazelrod

Late in December of last year Miss HazelNazelrod, adopted daughter of A. L. Nazelrod, of Sand Flat, six miles north of Oakland, became the bride of William McKinley Nazelrod, who says he served three years in the army and two years in the nevy, and whose home is somewhere in New Jersey. Following a short honeymoon, the couple returned to the home at Sand Flat where they continued to reside in contentment until a few days ago—last Thursday, to be exact—when a former suitor for the hand of Mrs. Nazelrod put in his appearance and succeeded in coaxing her to accompany him to Cumberland, holding out inducements that turned the little bride's mind away from her lawfully wedded husband. The suitor is known as Melvin Carder, who is said to have a wife in Pittsburgh, and a son of a few years of age who resides with Carder's mother in Cumberland.

Following the disappearance of the child-bride, for she will not be 17 until in May, Nazelrod and his father-in-law, started an investigation and with the aid of the Garrett county and Allegany county authorities Carder and Mrs. Nazelrod were located in Cumberland where they were living together in a three-room apartment on Bedford street and posing as "Mr. and Mrs. Porter."

Sheriff W. R. Harvey, of Cumberland, arrested Carder and placed him in the Allegany county jail until Friday when Sheriff Casteel went to the city and brought him to Oakland. On Saturday he was given a hearing before Justie Gonder and in default of bond in the sum of $1500 for his appearance at the June term of Court was remanded to jail.

Mrs. Nazelrod was brought back to Oakland by her foster-father and she is now at his home in Sand Flat where she will be looked after. Mr. Nazelrod avers.

The husband of the girl is also at Sand Flat where he is making his home with another member of the Nazelrod family.
